YANK'S STORY OF RED DRIVE

RICK'S PILOT HOOKS SHARK AND BATTLES IT TO DEATH

Drifting Flyers Eat Fish Raw on 9th Day in Rafts.

(This is the sixth instalment of the story—told here in full for the first time—of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and seven companions and their three weeks' fight for life against the perils of the equatorial Pacific. It is told by Lt. James C. Whittaker of the army transport command, co-pilot of the Flying Fortress which was crashed into the sea Oct. 21 after running out of fuel.)

Few people realize how much the human body can take and still come thru. Fortunately, not many have to find out the hard way.

As the sun rose on us on our ninth day adrift the opinion was pretty general among our eight men that we all would die in our rubber rafts.

The only exceptions were Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and I. We were the oldest of the crowd, and had been in some pretty tight places during our knocking around. I think you can tell whether it's your turn or not. I didn't think it was mine, and I was glad Rick was with us because he always comes back. I figured that if Rick was coming out alive, I was too.

Hauls In a Shark.

We started the day with sips of water rationed by Capt. William T. Cherry, who had been pilot of our Flying Fortress and commander of the party. We got 1½ inches of water in the bottom of a flare shell—about 1½ jiggers. And during the morning the Lord provided a few bites of food.

Among our shark escort that day was a little fellow about two feet long. Cherry got to teasing it with an unbaited fish hook.

To our surprise, the shark took it. Cherry hauled him over to the raft, drove in his sheath knife, and yanked him into the boat. The fight was on, and it was a rouser. That little devil jumped, slashed, and whipped about with his tail at uncomfortably close quarters. When there are three men in one of those rafts, there is little room for an enraged, two foot shark.

Our raft careened, took water, and once almost capsized. At last Cherry plunged his blade thru the shark's head and the battle was over. The blade also went thru the bottom of the raft, and a geyser of water shot up. We finally plugged the hole with a .45 cartridge and passed the carcass over to Col. Hans Adamson, Rick's military aide, to butcher and ration.

Drink Last of Water.

The raw shark steaks were pretty rank, and we were glad to get our next ration of water to wash away the taste. The next day brought real trouble.

We had the last of our water early on the 10th day. Shortly afterward, all the fellows except

TWO HEROES.

TOMORROW—ONE DIES; RAIN SAVES RICK AND OTHERS

In tomorrow's instalment Lt. James C. Whittaker tells how Sergt. Alex Kaczmarzyk, a passenger on the plane which had been carrying Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker into the South Pacific on a war department mission, became delirious after drinking salt water and finally died on the party's 12th night adrift. He describes the simple funeral service which the flyers said over the body before consigning it to the sea.

Sergt. Kaczmarzyk.

Lt. Whittaker also tells how a rain cloud passed near the rafts, but missed by a quarter of a mile — and how, after he asked God to send the rain back toward them, the cloud slowly came back and drenched the men with life saving rain tho the wind continued to blow in the opposite direction.

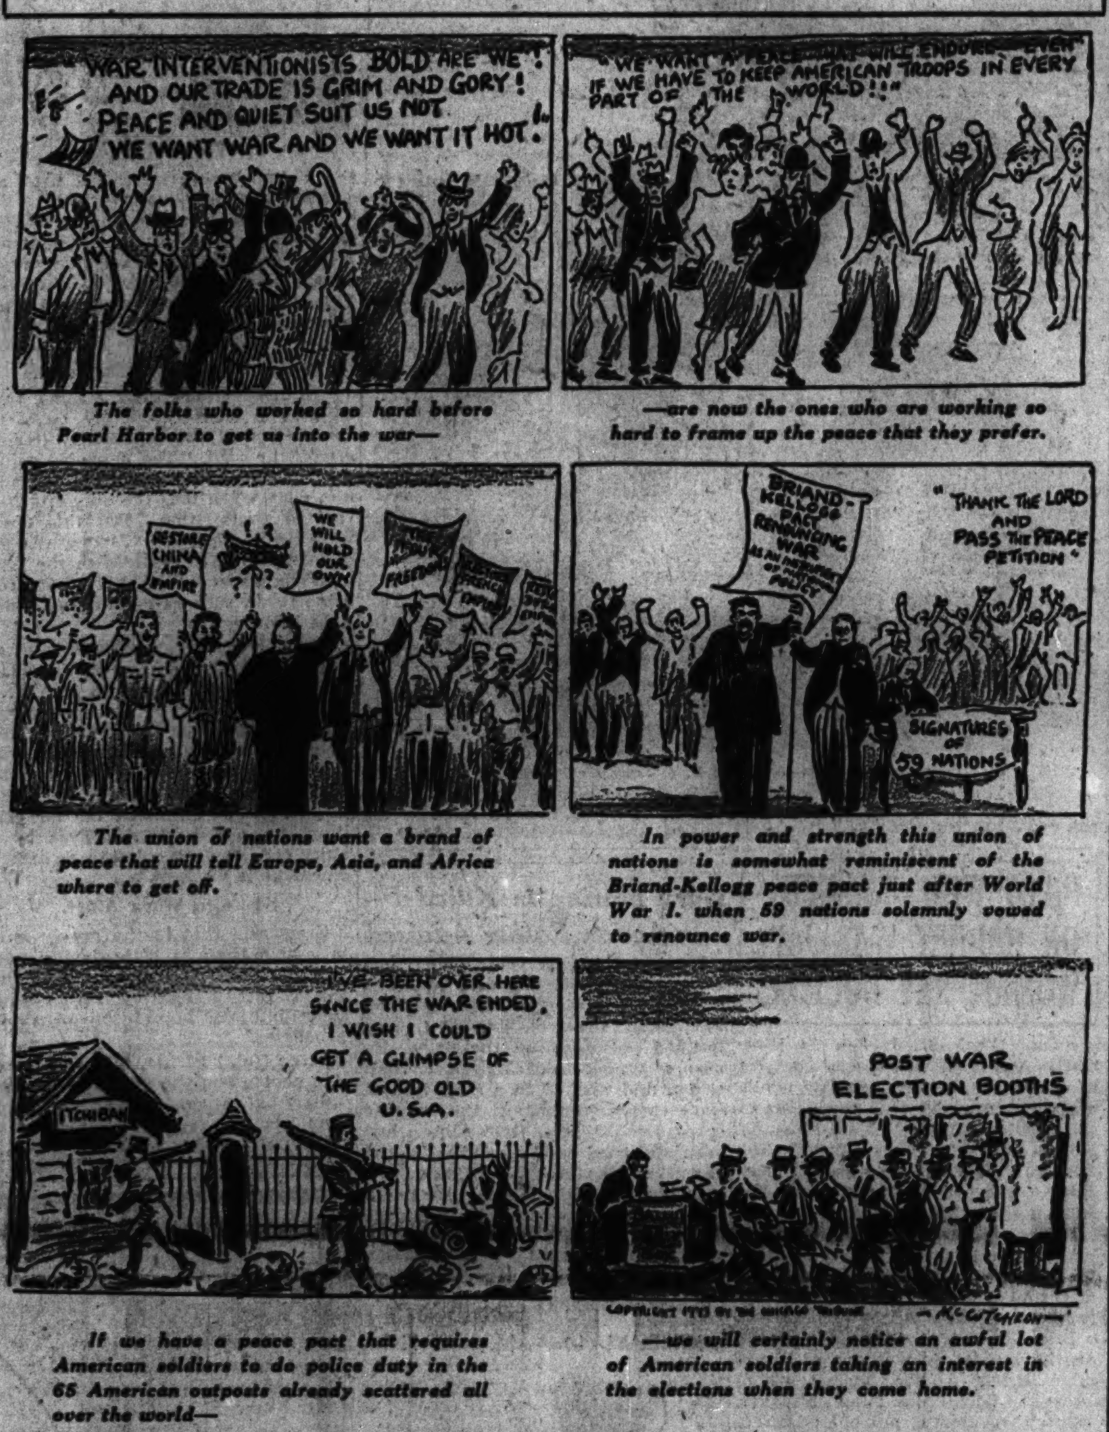
THE CHANGING WORLD



The folks who worked so hard before Pearl Harbor to get us into the war—

—are now the ones who are working so hard to frame up the peace that they prefer.

The union of nations want a brand of peace that will tell Europe, Asia, and Africa where to get off.

In power and strength this union of nations is somewhat reminiscent of the Briand-Kellogg peace pact just after World War 1. when 59 nations solemnly vowed to renounce war.

If we have a peace pact that requires American soldiers to do police duty in the 65 American outposts already scattered all over the world—

—we will certainly notice an awful lot of American soldiers taking an interest in the elections when they come home.

This Is Way County Tries to Save Cash

The finance committee of the county board met yesterday in the county building. That's about all there was to it. Members did mention that the 1943 county budget should be cut. County appropriations last year were more than 20½ millions and the revenues, which will be about the same this year, were only 18 millions.

Forty-five minutes late, its members gathered around a long table in the committee room and listened while Frank Venecek, superintendent of the Oak Forest infirmary, read the suggested budget for his institution.

Somebody Mentions Janitor.

"Wait a minute," interrupted Maurice F. Kavanagh, chairman. "There's too much smoking in here. Cut it out."

Several reached for cigars and cigarets and lit up.

Item by item Venecek went down the list. Somebody suggested a janitor be eliminated.

"We don't have time to argue," Kavanagh said. "Just put a question mark after it and we'll thrash it out in the back room. I'll appoint a subcommittee. Go on."

Harland Stockwell, director of the county budget survey staff, started to say something. "The former New York City purchasing agent says ——," he began.

No New Yorkers, Please.

"Is this problem too complex for this committee?" a member wanted to know. "We don't want a New Yorker telling us what to do."

"Go on," said Kavanagh. "Put a question mark after it."

Venecek's figures showed that the suggested Oak Forest budget would slice only $4,944 off the $1,129,894 spent last year. The budget was referred to a subcommittee.

Gen. Manus McCloskey, warden at County hospital, then presented his tentative 1943 budget, an increase of $768,989 over 1942 expenditures of $3,841,042, but a decrease of $296,355 from the 1942 appropriation.

Somebody wanted to discuss possible personnel reductions.

"I'll decide that later on," Kavanagh snapped.

"You'll decide it?" three members yelled.

"Yes, I'll decide it," Kavanagh said. "Somebody has got to decide something around here. I see that."

Gen. McCloskey continued and wound up his statement with: "Everything has been gone over, shaved to the bone, and can't be reduced a single cent. That finishes it."

Nobody said anything for a minute or so.

"Meeting's adjourned," said Kavanagh. The committee went home. Sessions will be resumed tomorrow morning.

SAPOSS, ONCE FIRED BY HOUSE AS A RED, BACK ON U.S. PAY ROLL

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 [Special].—David J. Saposs, Russian born former economist for the national labor relations board, who was dismissed two years ago when the house refused to appropriate money for his salary, has been rehired as a war production board "adviser."

David J. Saposs.

Wendell Lund, director of the labor production division of the WPB, made the announcement today, but did not reveal what salary would be paid Saposs.

The Dies committee on un-American activities and the Smith committee which conducted a searching NLRB investigation both condemned Saposs' presence on the federal pay roll. Saposs denied he was a Communist, but the committees produced his writings which followed the Red party line.

PLAN NATIONAL BAN ON TAXIS TO AMUSEMENTS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—A spokesman of the office of defense transportation today disclosed plans to place a nation-wide ban on the use of taxicabs to reach sporting events, amusement spots, and other places cataloged as nonessential. The spokesman said ODT lawyers have been working for a week on a proposed order, but it was impossible to predict when it might be issued because of efforts to avoid both loopholes and hardships in such regulations.

The ODT advised transit companies in 17 eastern states and the District of Columbia today not to expand bus service "for the accommodation of pleasure seekers" who can no longer drive their own cars.

Burma Border War Puts Men 'On Their Own'

BY ALEX SMALL.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW DELHI, India, Jan. 16—All along the Burmese border, relentless warfare of a special type, conditioned by the nature of the terrain, is going on. Here the individual is of supreme importance; the complicated machinery of modern warfare becomes secondary.

It is a question of what each man can do; what he can endure in hardships; what skill and courage he can show in close combat. It is the same sort of business which our soldiers knew when they fought their way thru the jungles of the Philippine Islands, only the present enemies are armed with modern weapons.

Soldiers Know Difficulties.

But soldiers who know the Burmese border country are more reserved in their opinions. They know it is a formidable task to move troops over these hills, jungles, and swamps—even without opposition.

Latest reports tell of hard fighting for the Japanese stronghold of Rathedaung, on the River Mayu, 25 miles from Akyab. The Japs no longer are retiring before the advance of allied troops, but are contesting every foot of the ground stubbornly.

Allied aviation appears to have a great advantage. Allied aerial attacks are constant, day and night. Heavy bombers keep pounding away at concentration points like Akyab Island; at supply depots; at bridges over the Irrawaddy, and over other rivers far in the enemy's rear.

Hideouts Machine Gunned.

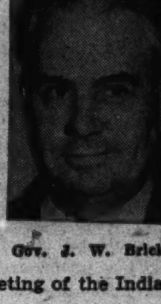
Aircraft of other types keeps backing up infantry operations with bombs and machine gunning of enemy lines and hideouts.

Along this 800 miles of frontier patrol work is of prime importance. The allies are making use of native tribesmen who know all the trails over the hills and thru the jungles. Officers, carefully selected for physical fitness, conduct this work. They operate in areas infested with mosquitoes and malaria; go over hills on precipitous jungle tracks, and cross raging torrents in full flood on bamboo bridges.

END SHACKLES OF BUROCRACY, BRICKER URGES

Warns Indiana Bar of U. S. Fetters.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 16 [Special].—Deploring the nationwide tendency in recent years "to substitute government of men for government of laws," Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio, urged broad reforms in the field of administrative law in an address here today before the midwinter meeting of the Indiana Bar association.



Gov. J. W. Bricker.

"Strong emphasis should be placed on the importance of immediate attention to the problem of administrative law," Bricker said. "Unless every state is able to throw off the shackles of burocracy, representative government will not succeed. To the extent that burocracy is destroyed and time tested standards of governmental policies are applied to administrative agencies, we shall be able to adapt our legal forms and our legal system to changing conditions.

Suggests Reforms.

"Only in that way shall we be able to keep faith with our sons who are fighting and dying that free representative government may live."

Referring to the rapid growth of administrative agencies in the last 10 years, Bricker said reforms should be undertaken on three fronts:

Rule making power and procedure; hearings relative to the granting, suspension or revocation of licenses; the problem of judicial review. He pointed out that administrative agencies ordinarily are given power to make rules of general application in carrying out their functions.

"These rules and regulations have the force of law and yet no standards have been established to protect the public against unsound governmental practices," he said.

Safeguards Needed.

"Among the evils is the practice of many agencies of adopting rules and regulations without notice to the general public or the parties affected. Many times, after adoption, these rules are not made freely available. Safeguards must be created to afford protection against the rule making power of administrative agencies without impeding their efficiency."

Proper consideration has not been given, Bricker said, to the fundamental principle of American government, that no person be deprived of any right or privilege without hearing. Many acts have no provision for hearings on the question of revocation, suspension or refusal to issue a license, and n some cases there is no provision for notice, preparation of a record or attendance of witnesses, he said.

Yanks Have 'Barter Bags' for Trading with Africans

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—The war department disclosed today that barter bags" have been provided for troops in North Africa. The bags, the department said, contain beads, scissors, cloths, perfumes, candies, cigarets, and scarce foodstuffs.

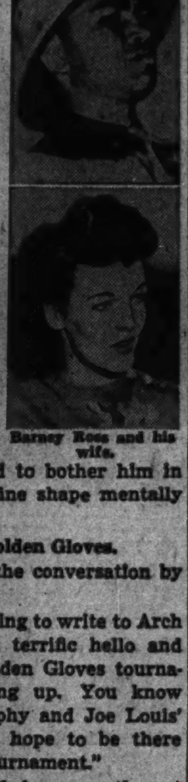
BARNEY ROSS, ON GUADALCANAL, SENDS A MESSAGE

BY ROBERT CROMIE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GUADALCANAL, Dec. 28 [Delayed].—Corp. Barney Ross of the marine corps says he'd rather fight Joe Louis five days a week than go thru again what he's gone thru here. But he adds that he wouldn't have missed it for anything.



Barney Ross and his wife.

The Chicago boy who was once lightweight and welterweight champion of the world, has "just knocked out malaria for the third time." Aside from that, and a slight touch of the old arthritis that used to bother him in the ring, he's in fine shape mentally and physically.

Refers to Golden Gloves.

Barney opened the conversation by saying:

"I've been meaning to write to Arch Ward and send a terrific hello and sendoff to the Golden Gloves tournament that's coming up. You know they have my trophy and Joe Louis' up every year. I hope to be there for next year's tournament."

That disposed of, he promptly got around to the Japs.

"As fighters I don't think they rate one-two with our guys," he said.

Barney has had first-hand experience with the Japs, since he spent an entire night in a shell hole holding off Japs with rifle and grenades to protect three other wounded marines. He was promoted to corporal for his action and recommended for a DSC.

He's Been Around.

"I felt I'd had everything in life the Lord would let one man have," he said. "All the fame, all the money, but I'd never had a war. I'd been everywhere, seen everything, done everything. The only thing I missed was a war. Now I've had that, and my life's complete."

Barney had a soft job teaching mass boxing at San Diego, but pestered his colonel so much they finally sent him overseas.

"What the hell," he says, "if I'd wanted a soft job I could have gone into a soft job. As long as I was in I wanted to get out and see what was doing. I didn't want any one to do my fighting for me. It's not really patriotism, it's just something you feel in your heart."

Asked why he happened to pick the marines, he said:

"Ever since I was a kid I'd always wanted to be either a marine or a Texas Ranger. That's the gospel truth. I figured the marines were a good rugged bunch, and I wanted to get in the best combat outfit."

Barney found his action, all right, and plenty of it.

"I'll never believe till the day I die," he says in all earnestness, "that I'm alive now. I've seen all I ever want to see."

Popular with All.

Barney says he hasn't any "beefs," but added that he misses Chicago.

Barney is a very popular Guadalcanalite, and one of his best friends is the Rev. Frederick Gehring, navy chaplain, from Brooklyn. Barney, who used to entertain the customers in his Chicago night club at Clark and Madison streets by playing "broken down old pieces" on the piano, plays the organ for Father Gehring's services and wears both his Jewish medal and one which Father Gehring blessed for him. Fridays Barney attends Jewish services.

Christmas day Barney played the organ, then rode around in a truck with Father Gehring and others entertaining the men in hospitals and encampments and helping Santa Claus pass out gifts.

"I had a swell day Christmas," Barney said. "All I missed was my wife and family."

FALLS INTO LAKE, CLINGS TO ICICLE UNTIL RESCUED

A jagged icicle on a pier at the foot of Keeney street in Evanston saved Byron Pence, 35 years old, yesterday when he clung to it until he was rescued from the lake. Pence, who lives at 108 Keeney street, slipped and fell into the lake while walking on the pier with his daughter, Diana, 8.

TELLS OF FIGHT FOR ROSTOV ON TRIP TO FRONT

Battle in Mildest Winter Since 1924.

No Stalingrad Truce

Germany's siege army trapped before Stalingrad is being "liquidated" after rejecting a Russian ultimatum on Jan. 9 to surrender, Moscow announced last night. Only 70,000 to 80,000 of the 22 divisions (about 220,000 men) caught in the Stalingrad trap now survive, the Russians said.

Russia also announced a new drive on the Voronezh front, where gains of 30-56 miles were recorded and 600 towns were recaptured. The new drive appeared to be headed northwest and southwest toward Kharkov.

The Reds also claimed advances in the Caucasus, on the northern Donetz river, and below the Don river toward Rostov. [Details on page 5.]

BY EDDY GILMORE.
[Associated Press Staff Correspondent.]

WITH THE RED ARMY SOUTHEAST OF ROSTOV, Jan. 16—The Russian army is advancing over this vast front in amazingly mild weather, disproving any theory that bitter winter temperatures contributed to Hitler's current Russian disaster.

Right now as we stand along the windswept steppe road, the Germans, according to Lt. Gen. Rodiony Malinovski, are showing signs of bewilderment, but there are indications that they may try to make a big stand on the line of the Manysh canal and the northern Donetz river.

I came to the Zimovniki region, which is 130 miles southwest of Stalingrad, by train and truck. I have found that sometimes it has been more of a problem to keep cool than warm, altho it is cold.

Mildest Winter Since 1924.

Dressed for subzero temperatures, I have stood in recaptured towns and Cossack villages and actually shed my overcoat in what the natives say is the warmest winter since 1924 and what the army commanders say is ideal weather for the Nazi panzers, which are not doing so well.

At the moment, big guns bang about us off to the flanks. Sometimes there is a whine of shells. The Germans are fighting back very hard and the Red army officers are frank to tell you so.

We cannot tell what is going to happen, but indications are that Gen. Fritz Erich von Mannstein, German leader commanding this front, may throw in fresh divisions and tanks to try to halt this Red army drive that really is rolling.

U. S. Trucks Aid Drive.

Down here close to blood and bullets you learn lots of things about this war you did not know, and you go lots of places you have wanted to go. One highlight was a long, frank talk with Lt. Gen. Malinovski. He opened maps and talked in the warmest spirit of friendship for the United States and Britain.

Incidentally, no commander I have talked to has reported use of any American or British tanks or planes in this drive southwest of Stalingrad, but United States made trucks have played a big rôle in transport.

Other conclusions:

Between 80,000 to 100,000 Germans are surrounded in an area of about 216 square miles outside Stalingrad.

Vast Regions of Wrecked Tanks.

I've talked to numerous German pilots shot down trying to get supplies to this huge group. At one time they sent over about 500 planes daily, but this has dropped off to about 100, with heavy losses.

I've seen enough wrecked German tanks and planes to set up a pretty good army. Great areas are strewn with them. In many places the Russians have herded them up and they look like monster junk yards.

Other places you see planes—plenty of them in good condition—abandoned by the Germans as they fled. At one place I saw among wrecked German tanks one which was marked "Midvale Steel 1918."

I came away from where the guns were booming for a night's sleep with the words of Malinovski uppermost in my mind:

"We continue our offensive."

NINE DAYS ADRIFT AND RICK PARTY CATCHES A SHARK

Fish Almost Upsets Their Tiny Raft.

me dicovered they were victims of the scourge deep water men dread—salt water ulcers. They had broken out with a rash a day or two before as a result of the burning, dehydrating effects of the encrusted salt from spray. On the parts of the body that rubbed against the sides and bottoms of the rafts, the rash grew angry and red.

It had been aggravated, too, by the scalding heat of the sun. Eruptions and ulcers developed in rapid order. It brought agony for a man to touch these eruptions.

There were several near fights as the fellows rubbed against one another inadvertently. A sergeant cursed a lieutenant. The lieutenant threatened to cut his throat. Men were beefing at one another in all three rafts.

Because I had escaped the scourge, I acted as peacemaker. And I had to be a pretty heavy handed peacemaker at times.

Th waterless afternoon in equatorial heat seemed to take something both physical and mental out of our company. The water we had had undoubtedly helped to keep life in our bodies, but it did little to ease our searing thirst. At the prayer service that night amid the rolling swells, Bill Cherry led the Lord's Prayer, which I knew pretty well by now, then each fellow prayed individually.

Promises New Lives.

I could tell more about those prayers; the promises the boys made to lead new lives if God should spare them. But it wouldn't be right to identify them here with their personal prayers. I guess we in those rafts know more about one another now than our mothers ever did. And that's probably just as well.

One man pledged to be a better husband and father if he were spared. Another promised he would provide for those dependent upon him. There were open confessions of past sins. I don't mind acknowledging that out there on the empty ocean I made resolutions. And I have kept them.

Since the rescue, I made up with a brother to whom I hadn't spoken in 15 years. Four months ago I couldn't be with any one 15 minutes without an argument or a fight. I saw little good in any one, and believed only in Jim Whittaker.

Now I accept every one as being decent and good until he proves otherwise. A few of my friends still treat me as tho I might be a time bomb—likely to go off at any minute. But my new outlook is going to last to the end of my days.

Prayer Arouses Rick.

On that 10th evening, Cherry again addressed himself to the Lord in behalf of us all, addressing Him as usual as "Old Master." He was serious and reverent. After acknowledging that Providence had saved us more than once, Cherry put it this way:

"You wouldn't have let us live this long if You didn't intend to save us eventually, would You, Old Master? We need some more of that rain and we need it in the worst way. How's about it, Old Master?"

One man, when his turn came, prayed that the Lord would kill him and end his sufferings. Rickenbacker jumped right down his throat.

"Cut that out!" he yelled. "If you want to pray, pray that the help that's coming will hurry up and get here. Don't bother Him with that whining. He answers MEN'S prayers, but not that stuff!"

When Rick prayed he always addressed the Lord as "Our Father." He asked oftenest that those who had heard our signals be guided to our rafts while we all still lived. He would ask also that we be guided to a landfall where we might find food and drink that would give us strength to help ourselves.

Rickenbacker's Faith.

Rickenbacker has never professed to be a religious man, as such. But he has the kind of religion that makes this world a better place to live in. Here are his own words, spoken after he was rescued:

"No," he said, in answer to a question, "I am not a religious man in any formal way. But I did have enough faith to hold me on this experience. I can say truthfully I never doubted for a minute we would be saved.

"I do have a religion of my own; I hold to the Golden Rule, and I believe most firmly that if a man just f.llows what he truly knows and feels in his heart then he can't go wrong and is possessed of religion enough to get by in any man's land."

After that evening's service, I felt something to help us was bound to happen. And it did.

PILOT WHO CRASHED ON HORNET WAS JAP WOMAN, SAY DOCTORS

Asbury Park, N. J., Jan. 16 [Special].—A woman was at the controls of one of the Japanese suicide bombers which crashed onto the decks of the United States aircraft carrier Hornet in the battle of Santa Cruz Islands, James S. Prince, petty officer third class, who escaped from the sunken ship, said here today.

Prince, who is on leave visiting his parents, said medical officers aboard the Hornet had examined the remains of the pilot and had established that it was a woman.

Prince said that during the attack on the Hornet he was one of a gun crew firing a five incher which brought down one Jap attacker. When the gun was put out of action he manned a 20 mm. gun that brought down at least two other planes, he said.

GREW WARNS U. S. OF JAP JUJITSU 'PEACE' TRICKERY

Plot to Mask Smashing Final Blow Suggested.

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—Japan may try to trick the United States again, this time with a jujitsu peace plot, former Ambassador Joseph C. Grew warned today.

Joseph C. Grew.

In an address before the Women's National Republican club luncheon Grew predicted the Japanese will pretend defeat, if necessary to catch the United States off guard with a sudden, smashing blow.

Grew, who as ambassador in Tokio in January, 1941, warned his government of a planned "surprise mass attack at Pearl Harbor" 10 months before it took place, explained the possibility of a jujitsu peace maneuver.

Other Alternative Suggested.

"In my various talks around the country I have repeatedly stressed the view that the Japanese will not crack," he said. "The Japanese military code does not admit of surrender, even when it is the only alternative to annihilation. But this does not mean that the Japanese will stand up to be shot down to the last man when some other alternative presents itself, such as running away to fight another day.

"The Japanese art of self-defense, jujitsu, gives us a clew as to what these tactics are likely to be. The essence of this art is that by letting the adversary take the initiative, and by giving way and simulating defeat, the adversary may be lulled into dropping his guard. Then, when the adversary has advanced too far and is off balance, he is destroyed by a quick recovery and a lightning attack where he is weakest."

Seeks to Warn Allies.

Grew said that in the purely military field there is little danger now that the Japanese will be able to fool this country's fighting forces with some military application of those principles.

"I do feel, however, that the American people and the people of nations united with them in war on Japan should be forewarned against the possibility of a jujitsu feint in the realm of diplomacy—namely, a peace offensive," he said.

He suggested the Japanese might set up a régime purportedly opposed to the present military dictatorship as a step toward a fake peace parley, whose aim would be to draw allied military forces away from danger points.

Grew said not only Japan but also Germany may try some such maneuver, and victory therefore must be complete before the peace can begin to be won.

Cites Treatment of Women.

He addressed a special appeal to his audience to remain alert to the ruthlessness of German and Japanese militarism as illustrated in their treatment of women.

He said that in Germany the Nazis have degraded their women into "physically healthy, morally degraded broodmares of militarism" and said the fate of women in the conquered countries is even worse.

"In Japan it is significant that this same picture of the degradation of women holds true," he said. "No other civilized people sells its young girls to panders with such openness. No other civilized people makes the mother so completely the slave of her husband and the servant of her sons."

REVEAL 'ANGELS' FINANCING PLOTS AGAINST TRIBUNE

Fancy Names Fail to Hide Organizations' Goals.

(This is the seventh in a series of articles telling of the attitude toward and treatment of the press of the nation by the New Deal. Tomorrow's article will tell of the New Deal's attitude toward The Chicago Tribune and other newspapers.)

BY WILLIAM FULTON.

Propaganda organizations with fancy names and mysterious financial "angels" backing them have figured largely in the conspiracy to "get THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE." The two principal ones have been the Fight for Freedom group and Friends of Democracy.

Fight for Freedom was the leading pro-war organization prior to the Pearl Harbor debacle. Friends of Democracy is operated by the Rev. Leon Milton Birkhead, a dissident Methodist preacher who makes a fat living out of calling people "traitors," "appeasers," "defeatists," "members of Nazi transmission belts," and other names.

Both organizations have been financed principally by eastern millionaire interventionists and Long Island cookie-pushing society friends of Wendell L. Willkie, ex-Republican nominee for President.

Few Don Uniforms.

While the two groups loudly beat the drums and cried for war when the United States was at peace, few of their leaders stepped into uniform after Pearl Harbor. Some of the younger ones got public relations and press agents' commissions.

Both the F. F. F. and F. O. D. have actively aided and abetted the administration's cabal against THE TRIBUNE. THE TRIBUNE has been subjected to numerous unsuccessful raids and petty investigations at the hands of G-men from the department of justice, secret service men, and naval intelligence men, all acting on express orders of higherups in Washington.

The attacks were stepped up just before the election. They all failed. It was thought for a time that the radical smear group would devote their energies to winning the war but then the Washington prosecuting machinery was put in motion to start an anti-trust suit against the Associated Press, a suit designed to benefit an administration organ and to crack down on THE TRIBUNE. The alien packs started again in full cry.

Branch Established Here.

Fight for Freedom established a Chicago branch for the purpose of conducting underhanded attacks on THE TRIBUNE.

While its financial shenanigans were never made public, it is known that an eastern millionaire gave the F. F. F. branch here free rent in a building he owned and later furnished $500 a month with which the rent was paid. Rent money, however, was only a small part of his contributions to the F. F. F.

In return F.F.F. carried out a promotional campaign for one of the smaller papers in Chicago published by their eastern donor. In conjunction with the Communists, the F.F.F. branch here tried to inaugurate a boycott of THE TRIBUNE. At the same time F. F. F. speakers urged audiences at meetings to whip up support for their financial "angel's" paper.

Attacks Former Employer.

One of these meetings was harangued by Edmond Taylor, a disgruntled former correspondent for THE TRIBUNE in Paris. Taylor is a highly paid assistant to Col. William J. Donovan, federal coördinator of information. The F.F.F. paid him for his services in coming to Chicago and attacking his former employer.

Taylor parted company with THE TRIBUNE following a series of reprimands for propagandizing and becoming hysterical in his reports. The newspaper had taken care of him at his full salary during periods of illness and gave him a handsome settlement on his departure.

Courtenay Barber Jr., 35 years old, director of the Chicago F. F. F. chapter, raged at THE TRIBUNE last July—more than six months after Pearl Harbor—when a reporter asked him why he hadn't offered his services for front line fighting after propagandizing for America's entry into the war.

Executive Secretary from Russia.

The other leading light of the Chicago branch was Dr. Albert Parry, executive secretary, who has dropped out of sight. Parry's real name is Paretzky and he was born in Russia in 1901. Parry should know something about fighting, having fought on both sides in the Russian revolution and deserting several times from the White army.

Fight for Freedom was disbanded as such after Pearl Harbor, but almost immediately rose again Phoenix-like from the ashes and became Freedom House, with headquarters in New York. The same people who promoted Fight for Freedom sponsored Freedom House which is presently advertising the views of Wendell Willkie.

National president of Freedom House, is Herbert Agar. Agar is now a non-fighting lieutenant commander in the United States navy, on leave of absence from the F. H., and also from the editorship of the Louisville Courier-Journal. He is in charge of navy press relations at London.

Long Resident of England.

Despite his "arduous" duties in the navy, Agar still had time to devote to his propaganda organization, Freedom House. Soon after he obtained his navy commission, Agar appeared, resplendent in his new uniform with the two and a half gold stripes, at Freedom House meetings in New York in August and September.

Agar's background explains his interventionist ideas. For years he lived in England and was an attaché at the American embassy. The publisher of the Louisville paper of which Agar was editor was the late ambassador to England, Robert Worth Bingham.

A few days before he went into the navy in August, Agar wrote a letter to a friend in Chicago on the stationery of the Friends of Democracy. He said:

"Some good friends of mine who are connected with this organization have planned a concerted program against THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE [and all obstructionist press]. For this they need money."

Willkie Among Directors.

Freedom House, of which Willkie is a director, enjoys tax exemption so long as it technically does not participate in politics. Before the last campaign, Freedom House sponsors hit upon a scheme to get around this obstacle.

At a small dinner given in New York an organization called "Votes for Freedom" was launched. Among those who attended were Willkie, Thomas Lamont, and Arthur J. Goldsmith. Lamont is a senior partner of the financial house of Morgan, which acted as fiscal agent for England in the last war, and Goldsmith is a former Wall street broker.

With the exception of Willkie and a few others, the personnel of Votes for Freedom is the same as Freedom House. There is only a handful of Republicans among them. Sponsors of Votes for Freedom tried to bring about the defeat of Thomas E. Dewey as the Republican nominee for governor of New York and put over Willkie. The plan fizzled badly.

Goldsmith was also a director of the so-called Coördinating Committee of Democratic Action which participated in the nation-wide campaign of defamation against members of congress, newspapers, and individuals who opposed the administration's war policies before Pearl Harbor.

The Rev. Mr. Birkhead, head of the Friends of Democracy which Agar reported needed money to carry on a "concerted program" against THE TRIBUNE, was always good at raising money for a cause—and himself along with it.

Years ago in Kansas City, Mo., he inserted ads in the Sunday Star urging young folks to come to his church for "dancing and cards and to get acquainted." He rented the church out to all comers, including Communists. He wooed national publicity by performing "companionate" marriage ceremonies.

One of the groups to which Birkhead turned over his church was the American League Against War and Fascism. This was a leading Communist front organization and was so described in an official opinion by Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle.

Tribune Assailed in Ad.

Just before the election campaign started, Birkhead peddled a vicious advertisment assailing THE TRIBUNE and other papers which have demanded an all-out program to win the war, no matter what political careers must be sacrificed.

The ad was printed in the San Francisco Chronicle but turned down by reputable newspapers, such as the New York Times, which sent the Friends of Democracy a note saying it was "not acceptable."

Another preacher of the same stripe as Birkhead who formerly served as president of the Friends of Democracy is the Rev. Joseph C. Cleveland of Kansas City. In April of 1938 he got Sally Rand, the fan dancer, to speak from the pulpit of his Congregational church. She made a plea for the Red army in Spain.

Author Stout Among Leaders.

Another prime mover in the Friends of Democracy and drafter of the scurrilous pamphlet which Birkhead peddled around to various newspapers is Rex Stout, bushy-bearded author of crime fiction. Stout's record as a fellow traveler in Communist "front" groups is a prize exhibit of the Dies congressional committee on un-American activities.

The identity of the fat cats behind Birkhead's activities has never been revealed. Birkhead has refused to make public a list of his financial "angels," but makes no secret of the fact that the Friends of Democracy are out to build up a war chest of 5 million dollars for their "cause."

Errol Flynn is defendant in a $15,415 action brought by Mrs. Selma Woods. She asserts she was seriously injured when her car and the actor's station wagon collided. The station wagon was driven by Buster Wiles, described as Flynn's bodyguard.

Actress Phyllis Brooks was sued in Santa Monica Superior court for $25,000 by Clarence D. Hague. He says his car was wrecked and he suffered a brain concussion in a collision with an automobile driven by George B. Girardet, Miss Brooks' chauffeur.

MERCHANT SHIP SINKS U-BOAT IN ATLANTIC FIGHT

LONDON, Jan. 17 [Sunday]—(AP).—Attacked by a pack of German U-boats, the British armed merchant ship Duchess of Bedford sank one of the undersea craft with a burst of gunfire and engaged and drove off another, the admiralty disclosed today without giving either the date or the place of the action.

The first submarine was on the surface during the battle, the report said, apparently fighting the merchant ship with its deck guns.

The Duchess of Bedford, a 20,123 ton passenger liner owned by the Canadian Pacific railway, was on the run between England and Canada before the war.

FARMERS SCOUR COUNTRYSIDE TO GET EQUIPMENT

Buy Tools on Group Basis; Need Repair Parts.

BY GAIL COMPTON.

Farmers, hard hit by the shortage of agricultural machinery, have been forced to resort to auction buying in their efforts to acquire tools with which to meet the government's demand for more and more food.

A rising storm of protest is spreading among the nation's farmers over the equipment shortage, which many of them attribute to the government's delegation of farm problems to men fundamentally unfamiliar with them.

Price Higher After 3 Years.

At a recent auction, a 3 year old tractor which cost $1,200 when new sold for $1,725. An 8 year old combine went for $600. Other equipment, some of which belonged on the scrap heap, also brought fancy prices, and even a rusty shovel, with a hole in it, netted $1.50.

Auction prices, under the pressure of active bidding, have been running up to astronomical levels. The office of price administration a few days ago sought to discourage the auctions by setting price ceilings on certain farm implements.

The average farmer knows and is reconciled to the fact that like every one else he must do without accustomed appurtenances because of the war. But he also knows that he has to do without essential machinery because the machinery is being shipped to farmers everywhere from the Falkland Islands to Arabia.

One Up, the Other Down.

Under a war production board limitation order issued by Joseph Weiner, a New York lawyer, the American farmer gets only 20 per cent of farm machinery manufactured in 1940, while foreign farmers are being sent as much as 118 per cent of the amount they imported two years ago.

Faced with the government's demand for more and more production, the nation's farmers will have to resort to many new practices if they are even to equal last year's record production.

They must plan crop rotation so that their present machinery will be able to do the work. They will have to choose crops that will distribute the job of planting, cultivating, and harvesting evenly thruout the season. They will have to guard against overloading or straining their implements because repair parts virtually have vanished from dealers' stocks.

Many farmers, acutely aware of their tremendous task and handicaps, are banding together to buy what machinery they can get. They are planning to make the machines community property in the hope that they will get their own and their neighbors' fields cultivated.

Workable Used Machinery.

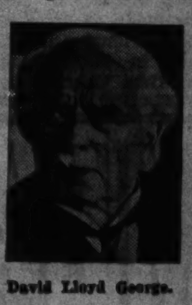
They are not asking everything at once. If they cannot get new equipment they will be content with workable used machinery, and if they can't get that they will be satisfied with repair parts for broken down implements. But in many sections the repair parts are as difficult to get as new machines.

One Michigan farmer was unable to get a steel repair part for his milking machine. He could not hire help nor could he milk the entire herd himself, so he sold five of the cows—this at a time when milk has been described as one of next year's outstanding needs.

This episode has been duplicated every day in hundreds of farming communities, and as a result the nation's food output is imperiled. The majority of farmers firmly believe that it will take a miracle to enable them to equal last year's production, and a miracle, they say, is the one thing Washington doesn't have on tap.

LLOYD GEORGE IS 80 TODAY, STILL GOING STRONG IN POLITICS

LONDON, Jan. 16 (AP).—David Lloyd George reaches 80 tomorrow, serenely playing his rôle of gentleman farmer but still bulking large in the political picture as the nation's foremost elder statesman.



David Lloyd George.

The man who solved the munitions crisis as prime minister in the first World war devotes most of his energy to the active management of his 800 acres at Churt, in Surrey, but he still holds the parliamentary seat from Carnarvon, Wales, that he first won in 1890.

The gray mane is thinner than it was in 1914 and his face is deeply lined. There still is the same firm jaw, tho, and a sharp wit. Despite Lloyd George's frequent criticisms of the government, he and Churchill have remained close friends. Lloyd George will be the guest of honor at a Liberal party luncheon next Tuesday.

HEAR NEW WAVE OF EXECUTIONS SWEEPS POLAND

LONDON, Jan. 16 (AP).—The Polish government in exile described the new series of executions, arrests, and mass deportations reported begun yesterday by the Gestapo in Warsaw and Silesia as the Germans' biggest extermination drive against the Polish people since the start of the war.

A corridor 60 miles wide is being swept thru Silesia to clear it of all Poles, and work is being speeded on the "east wall" defenses facing Russia, Deputy Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk said.

The Gestapo struck early Friday morning, he said, and thousands were arrested in Warsaw, and "many more thousands" elsewhere were ordered to prepare for immediate departure. The deputy premier said fighting broke out, particularly in the country districts, and it was said 1,700 persons were killed in a single village.

Cuba to Draft 8,000 for Military Service in April

HAVANA, Cuba, Jan. 16 (AP).—Between 8,000 and 10,000 Cubans 20 to 25 years old will be drafted in April for compulsory military training, it was announced today after a meeting of President Fulfencio Batista with the heads of the war forces and members of the national defense board.

BRITISH RENEW PUSH ON TRIPOLI, GERMANS CLAIM

LONDON, Jan. 16 (AP).—Axis reports said today that the British 8th army in Libya had renewed its offensive toward Tripoli with a strong armored attack at Wadi Zem-Zem, 180 miles southeast of the main Tripolitanian port.

German and Italian reports said Gen. Bernard L. Montgomery's Libyan army attempted to envelop fortified axis positions in the dry gulch 40 miles west of Sirte, but had been repulsed with the destruction of 35 tanks.

Report Is Unconfirmed.

The British communique, reporting action on Friday only, said patrol activity was more extensive, with casualties inflicted in "several sectors," but did not confirm the enemy assertions.

London military circles said, however, that the drive reported by the axis was not improbable. The Germans were the first to announce the previous two offensives, from El Alamein in Egypt last Oct. 23 and from El Agheila Dec. 14.

A Reuters news agency special correspondent on the Libyan front reported that Fighting French troops under Col. Ingold had reached the Tripolitania battle area after a dash up from the Lake Chad area south of Libya.

Allies Have Air Superiority.

The Americans and British apparently had air superiority over the axis both in Libya and Tunisia. Air opposition was almost completely absent in Libya as Montgomery's bombers blasted Marshal Erwin Rommel's positions while United States bombers started large fires at Tripoli. The harbor and road junctions were attacked.

Other planes struck Sfax and Gabes on the Tunisian east coast. Twenty-three axis planes were destroyed in the day and night engagements.

On the muddy Tunisian front, an allied communique said activity was limited to patrols.

A French communique said French troops in southern Tunisia captured "several important points" 20 miles northwest of Kairouan and won other positions to the south and northeast of Jebel Ousselat.

[The Berlin communique reported 12 allied planes were shot down Friday and eight destroyed on the ground. It also said axis bombing of the port of Bone had caused heavy destruction. Four allied ships totalling 19,000 tons were reported sunk by submarines northeast of Bengazi.]

66 SHIPS WITH SUPPLIES REACH AFRICA CIVILIANS

LONDON, Jan. 16 (AP).—Adm. Andrew Browne Cunningham told a press conference in North Africa that an allied convoy of 66 ships had arrived there, some loaded with food for the local population, the Algiers radio reported tonight.

The ministry of information in London said 36,000 tons of supplies for civilians have been sent to North Africa since the beginning of the allied campaign.

The goods included textiles, soap, medical supplies, oil fuel, and great quantities of food such as flour, cheese, sugar, tea, and dried products, already being rationed by French authorities.

GIRAUD ORDERS AFRICA POLITICAL CAPTIVES FREED

ALLIED HDQ., North Africa, Jan. 16 (AP).—Official sources stated today that orders had been issued for the release of all political prisoners arrested under the Vichy régime on charges of favoring the allies. The announcement was made as negotiations between Gen. Henri Giraud, high commissioner in North and West Africa, and Gen. Charles de Gaulle, Fighting French leader, were understood to be progressing satisfactorily.

The same sources said Giraud had issued orders relaxing certain measures against the Jews. Orders for the release of political prisoners previously had been issued under the régime of the late Adm. Jean Darlan, but their effectiveness had remained a matter of doubt.

NAZI STALINGRAD FORCES REJECT RED PEACE OFFER

Soviets Wiping Out Last of 22 Trapped Divisions.

LONDON, Jan. 17 [Sunday]—(AP).—The Russian army has broken thru the defenses of the starving Germans at Stalingrad, who rejected a soviet ultimatum to surrender, and is rapidly mopping up the 70,000 to 80,000 troops left of a force which once numbered 220,000, a special Moscow communique said last night. The broadcast communique was heard here by the soviet monitor.

The final phases of liquidation will be carried out, it said, after the Germans rejected an offer of post-war repatriation to Germany or immigration to any chosen country if they gave up.

Today is the 146th day that the Russians have battled German forces in Stalingrad.

Advance on Voronezh Front.

The first of two special communiques told of the opening of a new soviet offensive along the upper Don river just south of Voronezh, in which advances of 30 to 56 miles were marked up and 600 towns captured. Among the captured towns was Rossosh, 90 miles southeast of Voronezh on the Moscow-Rostov railway. Enemy casualties in the three days of the new drive totaled 17,000 captured and 15,000 killed, the announcement added.

[Apparently the "new" Voronezh drive is a resumption of an offensive in the same area announced by Moscow on Dec. 20.]

The second communique said the Germans trapped at Stalingrad were dying of exhaustion, starvation, and freezing and their numbers had been reduced from the original 22 divisions to 70,000 or 80,000 men, with 500 dying daily from the cold and 1,000 from other causes.

Liquidation Nearly Finished.

"The liquidation of the German Fascist troops encircled in the Stalingrad area is drawing to a close," the communique declared.

[The German high command yesterday admitted for the first time that its troops near Stalingrad were surrounded, saying they repelled strong attacks "from all sides." A German military commentator called this an admission that "there had been no direct contact by land for some time" with these forces.]

An ultimatum was given to the Germans at Stalingrad on Jan. 8, the soviet communique said, advising them an answer was expected the next day. The ultimatum painted a grim picture of the fate awaiting—and being dealt out—to the Nazi siege army. However, the German commander rejected the terms, the communique said, concluding:

"In view of this, on Jan. 10 our troops commenced a general attack against the German Fascist troops encircled near Stalingrad."

In the seven days of fighting since then the Russians were said to have wiped out 25,000 officers and men, captured 6,896 of the encircled troops, destroyed 1,526 fortified positions, and cleared a large area of the enemy.

In the same period, 317 planes, 514 tanks, and 941 guns were said to have been captured.

In efforts to aid the trapped forces by air transport, the announcement added, the German high command lost 600 planes from Nov. 19 to Jan. 10.

The new offensive was launched from the areas of Selyavnoe and Shchuchnoe, just below Voronezh, and the district of Kantemirovka further southeast, the first communique said. In the first two areas, the drive went southwest, while from Kantemirovka it went northwest and west, forming a pincers.

Nine enemy divisions, including six Hungarian divisions, were routed, it was said.

Drive Toward Kharkov.

The northern flank of the drive was headed toward Kharkov, the vital Ukraine center. One of the towns captured was Krasnoe, 55 miles southwest of Voronezh, and 120 miles northeast of Kharkov.

The Russian midnight communique said the Russian forces were continuing to roll forward in the northern Caucasus, along the northern Donetz river, and below the Don river toward Rostov.

[The Germans yesterday said strong Russian attacks were repelled on the southern front. They also reported they had destroyed more strongpoints on the central sector, before Moscow. Continued fighting was reported in the Veliki Luki area, northwest of Moscow.]

Shorthand Reporters Pick Officers for Association

The Chicago Shorthand Reporters' association in annual session at the Hotel Sherman yesterday elected T. A. Copple, A. H. Frederick, Edward Newlander, Harold W. Wynkoop, and Grace L. Kallman to the executive committee. The committee, in turn, chose Copple chairman. Mrs. R. S. Freeman was made secretary and treasurer.

TALK OF GERMAN ARMY OFFICERS SEIZING POWER

Prepare Plan to Take Over When Break Comes.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, Jan. 16 (AP).—The military junta in Germany feels that if Nazi economic difficulties continue and deepen, the only solution will be for officers to seize control and proclaim a program for possible coöperation with the allies, reliable sources today quoted a German state official as saying.

These sources said the officers are watching developments, but making no predictions as to when the time for such a step might come. They are pictured as being convinced that the German people will look to them for action as a last hope, once a military reverse makes the hopelessness of the situation clear to every one despite propaganda camouflage.

Reports of such groups hoping to save the situation when chaos appears imminent—altho perhaps axis inspired—are persistently received in London and Stockholm.

Reports mention Field Marshal Gen. Wilhelm Keitel as among the higher officers in any such move. Keitel, chief of the high command of the armed forces, was recently reported to have been dismissed.

Hitler's shakeup among his officers and recent reports of a steady increase in the strength and power of Heinrich Himmler's secret police are termed significant in the light of the existence of a military junta. Observers here said they believed such moves might be Hitler's method of endeavoring to squash the opposition without a thorogoing purge, which might crack the home front wide open.

REPORT NAZI CAPITAL RAIDED; R. A. F. HITS LORIENT U-BOAT BASE

LONDON, Jan. 17 [Sunday]—(AP).—A Reuters British news agency dispatch from Stockholm, Sweden, quoting the Berlin correspondent of the Svenska Dagbladet, said the German capital was raided Saturday night. He said a very heavy anti-aircraft barrage was heard.

The R. A. F. returned with a heavy attack Friday night on Lorient, France, Hitler's principal submarine base on the Atlantic, setting large fires on the docks and pens in the second raid there in two nights. Railway targets in western Germany, France, and the Low Countries were raided.

In all the extensive raids, only two British bombers were lost.

The 59th raid on Lorient, to which the R. A. F. shifted after eight attacks on the German Ruhr in 11 nights, centered on newly fortified submarine pens.

Allied Raid on Rangoon Kills 1,000, Japs Report

New York, Jan. 16.—(AP)—More than 1,000 Burmese men and women were killed or wounded during an allied air raid on Rangoon, Burma, Dec. 20, a German broadcast of Tokio dispatches recorded here tonight. The broadcast said the casualties were announced in a communique issued in Rangoon.

DEFENDERS BAG 30 JAP PLANES AT GUADALCANAL

3 Destroyers and Supply Ship Bombed.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—The navy announced today that American forces in the Solomon Islands had shot down 30 Japanese planes, damaged three destroyers, and bombed and left burning a cargo ship in a series of actions resulting from enemy attempts to reenforce and supply Jap troops on Guadalcanal Island.

Seven United States planes were lost.

On Guadalcanal itself, a communique said, American troops continued to advance against "stiff enemy resistance." Gains of 3,000 to 4,000 yards were reported.

The heaviest day's fighting took place on Friday beginning with an attack by a single Catalina plane on five Japanese destroyers 16 miles northeast of the Russell Islands, 60 miles northwest of Guadalcanal. The Catalina scored one direct hit and two near hits on one of the destroyers.

Nine Destroyers Attacked.

Later a force of Dauntless dive bombers, escorted by Wildcat and Airacobra fighters, attacked nine Jap destroyers 140 miles northwest of Lunga point on Gaudalcanal. Two of the destroyers were reported seriously damaged.

Twelve Jap Zero fighters attempted to intercept this attack and eight were shot down. One American dive bomber was forced down and five American fighters failed to return from the action. An American plane patroling around Guadalcanal engaged and shot down three Japanese Zeros.

There was no letup in the fighting during the afternoon. Flying Fortresses with fighter escort of Lightnings, Airacobras, and Warhawks went into action against five enemy destroyers 37 miles southeast of Fasi Island, in the shortland Island area, 300 miles northwest of Guadalcanal, and in the general vicinity of the Japanese airbase at Munda.

12 Biplanes Shot Down.

None of the enemy vessels was hit, the communique said, but 12 of the enemy biplanes which attempted to intercept the assault were shot down. No American planes were lost.

Friday evening, a force of dive bombers, Wildcats, and Airacobras attacked an enemy cargo ship 37 miles northwest of Munda, scoring two direct hits and four near hits and setting the vessel afire. The American fighters drove off twelve enemy Zeros, shooting down seven of them. One American fighter failed to return.

Village on Buka Bombed.

On Thursday American planes traveled far northwest from Guadalcanal to attack Sorum village, three miles east of the enemy airfield on the southern end of Buka Island. No results of this action were reported. Twice on Thursday morning, enemy planes bombed American positions on Guadalcanal. The communique said that installations were not damaged, but that "United States forces suffered some casualties."

'GLACIER PRIEST' VIEWS KISKA AS JAPANESE TRAP

Chico, Cal., Jan. 16 (AP).—Dr. Bernard Hubbard, Santa Clara university's "glacier priest" newly returned from a special navy assignment in Alaska and the Aleutians, thinks it would be a mistake to force the Japanese out of Kiska now.

Father Hubbard.

"We can kick the Japs out any time it serves our purpose," Dr. Hubbard said today in an interview. "Right now, it is wise to use Kiska as a rattrap and keep knocking off Japanese vessels and equipment on arrival. The Japs only keep Kiska to save face and they are getting a lot of whacks in doing it."

One of the explorer's commissions in Alaska was to determine how clothing issued to flyers filled the needs of men in the Arctic climate.

"Modeling our suits on the quilted idea of Tartar-Mongol-Eskimo winter equipment," he explained, "the party kept perfectly warm and cozy in 45 degrees below zero."

JAP SUBMARINES SUPPLY TROOPS ON GUADALCANAL

Float Drums of Food to Island at Night.

WITH AMERICAN FORCES ON GUADALCANAL, Jan. 4 [Delayed]—(AP).—Expert knowledge of tides and currents around this embattled island, gained thru years of pre-war snooping, is enabling the Japanese to keep their troops on Guadalcanal adequately supplied with food by submarine.

The majority of Japanese killed in recent fighting appear to be in good physical condition, lean and hard muscled. American front line officers agree it is "wishful thinking" to believe that the enemy will be annihilated by starvation.

Japanese submarines approach the island at night and, cast loose water tight oil drums or small rafts loaded with food. A good percentage of the food reaches the beaches and is picked up by the Japanese garrison.

Supplies Flown In.

American fighter planes and dive bombers from Henderson field patrol the shore line daily to shoot up and burn as much of these supplies as possible, but much slips thru, nevertheless.

Another, tho smaller, source of supply for the Japanese troops since their major convoys met sisaster in attempts to relieve them is by parachute from flying boats. One morning 40 food parachutes were spotted on the ground by American flyers, another time 20.

Japanese field rations captured recently consisted of dry rice, dry soy bean sauce to be mixed with water, dried soy bean paste, and a sort of ersatz hardtack. Each man carries and cooks his own rations.

United States army doctors say the diet is fairly nutritious, and a fighting officer voiced full agreement.

Not Suffering Much.

"When I see those Japs charging up and down hills and thru the jungles day after day I have a hard time believing it," he marveled. "They might not be getting a stomachful three times a day, but they are not suffering much."

The dead Japanese are found to be lean, but that is a physical trait common to both sides on this island. Nobody remains plump long under the excessive heat.

Malaria is the enemy both of American and Japanese troops.

Mr. Benson says

"Did you ever EAT an Overcoat?"

Of course you haven't, and neither have we, but, unless we sell the greater portion of the 5,000 overcoats we now have on hand, it looks like an overcoat diet for us from now on. The crux of the situation is this: In previous years when the overcoat selling season was finished we just stored those that remained in camphor; but now things are decidedly different, for with the coming Inventory Control every single overcoat we carry over means one less Spring or Summer suit that we will be permitted to purchase. In other words, our buying power for next season will be handcuffed to our non-moving overcoat stock. Therefore, to alleviate this situation, beginning Monday, January 18th—every overcoat in our four stores, regardless of price, will be slashed 25% from their ceiling prices.

Example:

$24.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now $18.37	$44.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now $33.37
29.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now 22.12	49.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now 37.12
34.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now 25.87	60.00 Overcoat, less 25%—now 45.00
39.50 Overcoat, less 25%—now 29.62	85.00 Overcoat, less 25%—now 63.75

Our cards are on the table—we have to get out from under. Here is an opportunity of a lifetime for any man who needs an overcoat—take advantage of it.

STORE HOURS—Because of This Sale All Stores Open Monday 9:30 A. M. to 9 P. M.

NOTE—The one and only exception to these sweeping reductions is the nationally price-controlled Alpagora coat at $32.50 in the California weight—and $37.50 in the heavier winter weights.

5,000 ON DRAFT DELINQUENT LIST TOLD TO REPORT

Unintentional Violators Promised Leniency.

Suspected draft delinquents were notified yesterday by Col. Paul G. Armstrong, state selective service director, that their derelictions would be dealt with leniently if they report to their local draft boards before Jan. 31.

Col. Armstrong said there are approximately 5,000 names on the suspect list in Chicago, an average of 100 for each ward. Most of the delinquents, he explained, are not intentional violators of the selective service act, but have failed, thru carelessness or ignorance, to report.

Willful Evaders Warned.

To avoid unintentional delinquency, he urged registrants who have had no contact with their boards for six months to notify the boards of their correct present addresses.

Many instances of reported delinquency, Col. Armstrong said, are due to men enlisting and failing to notify their draft boards.

He warned that registrants who continue to ignore draft regulations face prosecution. Conviction carries a penalty of five years imprisonment, a $10,000 fine, or both.

List Suspects in Five Wards.

A list of 500 suspects released yesterday included names of men reported to be residing in the 1st, 6th, 13th, 16th, and 19th wards. Delinquencies include failure to report for induction, failure to show up for physical examination, and failure to notify boards of an address change or a change in status.

FORMER N. U. AID ORDERED BACK TO ALIEN CAMP

Albert W. Krause, 46 years old, a German born technician who was stripped of American citizenship last September for making disloyal and seditious statements, was ordered returned to an enemy alien internment camp at Camp McCoy, Wis., yesterday by Federal Judge Philip L. Sullivan. Krause, a former employé of the physics department of Northwestern university, appeared on a writ of habeas corpus to obtain a review of the citizenship revocation order. Judge Sullivan refused to grant a review and remanded Krause to custody of camp officers.

MARIST MISSION SURVIVOR QUITS GUADALCANAL

BY SERGT. RICHARD T. VENN.
[Marine Combat Correspondent.]

GUADALCANAL, Dec. 12 [Delayed]. —Sister Ednee Bonnet, sole survivor of a Marist mission served by two priests and three sisters, left the island yesterday by plane. The 34th missionary to be evacuated since the marines landed, Sister Ednee had administered to the natives for 18 years.

She rode in an automobile yesterday for the first time. A jeep carried her over rutted, muddy roads to the airport. The plane that took her to safety was the second one she had ever seen. The first was a Japanese Zero, which strafed the village in which she had taken refuge.

Last September she left the mission at Luruvatu to visit some outlying villages. On her way home she was stopped by the natives. They told her the mission had been captured and the two priests and the two other sisters were dead. Natives then took her to their village. For three months they nursed her thru an illness which nearly took her life. A navy chaplain, Lt. Frederick Gehring, brought her to the American base in a schooner.

FATAL FIRE HELD ACCIDENT.

The death of Felix Miller, 45 years old, 3260 North Clark street, was termed accidental in a verdict returned yesterday by a coroner's jury. Miller was found burned to death in the rear of his shop Friday.

Reduce Three Mile Triangle at Sananada.

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, Jan. 17 [Sunday] — (AP). — American and Australian ground forces are pinching in toward Sanananda, New Guinea, from two directions, moving slowly thru the rain soaked jungle with direct support of the air force.

Step by step, they are reducing the Japanese triangle with a base about three miles on the coast and extending about two miles inland, the only sector still held by the Japs in the Papuan peninsula.

Fight Around Log Fort.

On one side, fighting centered around an American built road block, consisting of coconut logs and dirt filled gasoline drums.

At the same time, allied patrols remained active in the area of Mubo, south of Salamaua, where during a three day period earlier in the week more than 100 Japs were slain and their headquarters destroyed in a surprise attack.

Jap Cruiser Attacked.

Air activity, as outlined in today's noon communique, again spread out over the whole northeastern sector, with the heaviest raid aimed at Lae, 175 miles up the coast from the Sanananda fighting. There bombers and fighters started fires among seaside supply dumps and also attacked the airdrome.

A four motored Liberator on armed reconnaissance found a Japanese cruiser 60 miles south of Cape St. George, New Ireland; attacked it with unreported results, and shot down one of four Jap fighters which tried to intercept.

230 Aged English Leave Italy, Arrive in Portugal

LISBON, Portugal, Jan. 16 (AP).— Two hundred and thirty English men and women, most of them over 65 years old, arrived at Caldas da Rainha, a health resort north of Lisbon, from Italy yesterday. Most of them were long time residents of Italy and some are expected to stay in Portugal for the duration because of their advanced age.

MICHIGAN CITY'S NAVAL TRAINING STATION REOPENS

The naval training station at Michigan City, Ind., decommissioned Dec. 26, when a gunner's mate school was transferred to the Great Lakes naval training station, will reopen tomorrow with 250 radio technicians studying repair and maintenance, Lt. R. G. Hotchkiss, commanding officer, announced yesterday.

The school will offer refresher courses, Lt. Hotchkiss said, and will be located in the naval reserve armory, housing 300, including a ship's company of 50. A group of 250 students from the east coast arrived in Michigan City yesterday.

ORDNANCE DEPOT IN BRITAIN LIKE A BIT OF CHICAGO

Yanks from 'Windy City' Keep 'Em Rolling.

BY SEYMOUR KORMAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND, Jan. 16.—Tanks with broken treads, range finders and ack-ack directing devices which need adjustment, rifles and carbines with damaged parts—these are among the ailing weapons of war which are made whole in the United States army ordnance depot visited today by newspaper correspondents. The depot, taken over by the Americans from the British last June, is the largest in the United Kingdom, and now is repairing much equipment.

This correspondent—the first newspaperman to visit this station, last September—today found its scope considerably enlarged. Its slogan, "Fixing everything from a wrist watch to the biggest tank," seems literally true.

The depot has large machine shops, an engine rebuilding plant, artillery repair floors, blacksmith shops, a battery department, a warehouse of replaceable parts, and rooms where watches are adjusted. In the welding shop, Corp. Thomas C. Chavez of 806 South Ashland avenue, Chicago, was at work putting on a new governor.

Learns Better Trade.

"I worked in a warehouse back home," he said, "but the army is teaching me a better trade. After the war is over, I expect to open an electrical shop."

Staff Sergt. Frank Nelson, 1219 East 62d street, and Pvt. William Fasna, 4634 Ohio street, are in their element here—both had mechanical tool experience before entering the army, and both are engaged in similar work here, being employed on army scout cars and carbines.

Staff Sergt. Ernest E. Dancer, 1340 Albion avenue, an insurance salesman in civilian life, today was fixing a delicate director for a 40 millimeter ack-ack gun.

"Actuarial tables will not be half so fascinating in peacetime," Dancer remarked.

He Likes "Walkie Talkies."

The depot's commanding officer, Col. Clarence W. Richmond, formerly of Jackson, Mich., has been in the regular army 29 years. He organized the 65th cavalry division, officers' reserve corps, in Chicago from 1923 to 1928, and has been a pioneer in mechanizing the army's cavalry. Col. Richmond said that several hundred vehicles are brought to this depot daily for repairs.

The colonel is currently fascinated by "walkie talkie" radio sets. These small devices, with telephone mouthpieces, head set receivers and collapsible antenna rods, have a range up to two miles. They are used for direct communication upon the battlefield. Col. Richmond illustrated how they work by giving orders thru one of the sets to various parts of this huge depot.

Corp. Joseph Fertel, 1504 East 74th place; Pvt. Alexander R. Barre, 6931 South Honore street; Pvt. Edward Miskiewcz, 2027 Chicago avenue; Pvt. Harold H. Hein, 5525 South Wood street; Pvt. Calvin C. Holmes, 5108 Cornelia avenue; Pvt. Frank J. Kabat, 1713 South Morgan street; Pvt. Theodore Sabala, 2503 North Ridgewood avenue; Pvt. Walter T. Sheppard, 4929 North Central Park avenue; Pvt. Jay L. Stone, 5126 Kimbark avenue.

Still More Chicagoans.

YANKS IN LISBON "LITTLE MAD" AT BEING INTERNED

Portuguese Excited as 11 Planes Land.

LISBON, Portugal, Jan. 16 (AP).—The 11 American fighter pilots who created excitement at Lisbon's civil airport yesterday by landing their storm lashed Airacobras while a big United States bomber circled overhead were a "little mad" at being interned but were well treated and on the whole "very decent" about it, authoritative sources said today.

The flyers landed "only after a long struggle against unusually strong headwinds to reach their destination further south when their fuel was exhausted," authoritative quarters at the airport said.

Twelfth Plane Lands.

A 12th plane was forced to land at Aveiro in northern Portugal after a severe buffeting by strong winds.

[German broadcasts said 33 flyers landed, a report which evidently was incorrect since the Airacobras carry but one man.]

Girls who serve free coffee to passengers and visitors at the airport said, "At first we didn't know what kind of planes they were or their nationality, and got a little frightened. But soon we saw they were American and it was a beautiful sight, the perfect formation and the way they landed."

Pilots "Very Tired."

Officials said the pilots were escorted to a town outside Lisbon, the name of which they did not disclose. But if the case was handled as on previous like occasions they were taken to the frontier military plaza of Elvas near the Spanish border.

"The boys were very tired and naturally had to go thru the usual procedure with Portuguese authorities who held them from freely communicating with other people before their official statements were made," authorities said.

"They were treated decently and were themselves very decent about it all altho they were a little mad at learning that they would be interned and would not be allowed to take off again," they added. "Naturally there was some excitement provoked by the unexpected landing of 11 fighting planes on a peaceful civil airfield while a huge bomber circled over it."

Two British air liners which arrived at the same airfield a few minuates later, two hours behind schedule, said heavy winds "almost stopped us in the air."

A YANK AND A JAP CRASH; 1 GUESS: WHO'S CAPTURED?

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—The war department reported today that 2d Lt. Wallace L. Dinn of Corpus Christie, Tex., was on a mission over Guadalcanal. Dinn's plane and a Jap Zero which engaged him were both damaged and made crash landings. The American was injured—so was the Japanese. Dinn enlisted the aid of friendly natives and captured his enemy. Both later were picked up by marines and taken to a Solomons Island base.

M'KIBBIN NAMES 3 AIDS IN G. O. P. MAYORAL RACE

Lyle Letter Attacks Him; Albert Raps Kelly.

BY PARKE BROWN.

George B. McKibbin, regular organization choice for the Republican nomination for mayor, proceeded rapidly yesterday with the selection of his campaign staff.

Having completed the transfer of the affairs of the office of director of the state department of finance to his former assistant, Samuel L. Workman, who has been named acting director, and conferred with his associates on the slate, Morgan L. Fitch for city treasurer, and Henry D. Lindblad for city clerk, McKibbin plunged into campaign planning.

Committee Heads Appointed.

He announced the chairmen of three committees to coöperate with his campaign manager, John T. Dempsey, county chairman of the Republican central committee. They are Edward L. Ryerson, who will head the finance committee, Ferre C. Watkins, who as chairman of the publicity committee will direct all public activities, and Leonard C. Reid, chairman of the committee on volunteer organizations.

Ryerson led the first voluntary movement for relief and now is head of the Illinois public aid commission. He is chairman of the board of the Inland Steel corporation.

Watkins, general counsel for liquidations in the state department of insurance, is former state commander of the American Legion.

Lyle Letter Assails McKibbin.

John H. Lyle, one of the candidates against McKibbin, sent him an open letter yesterday telling him that his [McKibbin's] nomination would mean sure defeat in April. He said McKibbin is "not quite typical of the average citizen of Chicago," and that his entire social, financial, professional, and business background, and his family relations have aligned him with private and public service corporations and the banking interests.

Lyle recited the connections of McKibbin's former law partner, Thurlow G. Essington, and McKibbin's father-in-law, B. E. Sunny. He connected Essington and James B. McCahey, president of the school board, because both are officers of the Morrison hotel. He described Sunny, former president and chairman of the board of the Illinois Bell Telephone company, as a representative of traction security holders.

Albert Raps Kelly on Schools.

Arthur F. Albert, seeking the same nomination, issued a statement condemning conditions in the public schools under Mayor Kelly.

"Both the board of education and the teaching force are headed by ruthless politicians," read the statement. "We have witnessed the mayor, year in and year out, disclaim responsibility for the conduct and activities of the school board on the theory that, once they were appointed, he is no longer accountable for their administration.

"This is an entirely false and hypocritical attitude of any mayor of Chicago to assume because the members of the school board always obey the mayor's wishes and reflect the kind of administration he is giving to the city as a whole."

Reign at Dance

Miss Joan Jenkins, 8144 South Wood street, was presented as the "dream girl" of Illinois Institute of Technology's 2,080 men students last night at the school's first formal dance of the year in the Morrison hotel.

Her attendants were Miss Helen Gordon, 6517 Hiawatha avenue, a sophomore at Illinois Tech, and Miss Rita Barry, 7138 Yale avenue, a secretary. The three girls were selected in a contest conducted by the student yearbook, the Integral.

Profits from the dance will be given to the U. S. O.

GEN. STILWELL'S SON PINS D. S. C. ON HIM IN CHINA

CHUNGKING, China, Jan. 16 (AP).—Lt. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, chief of staff of the allied forces in China, received the distinguished service cross today in a surprise ceremony at hih hillside home, overlooking the Chialing river, his own son pinning the decoration on his breast.

Lt. Col. Joseph R. Stilwell gravely shook hands with his father after Col. William E. Bergin had read the order presenting the medal, which arrived today from the United States. Gen. Stilwell had not been warned and muttered "who thought this one up?" as he found a party of his officers, correspondents, and photographers drawn up.

After the ceremony, during which he looked proud and pleased, he said "thank you" gravely to his officers and went into the house. The celebration then began, with drinks for all hands except the two Stilwells, teetotalers.

$10.35 or Greater Tax Rate Predicted by Civic Group

The Civic federation estimated yesterday that the 1942 city tax rate would be between $10,35 and 10.56 per $100 assessed valuation, a sharp increase over the 1941 rate of $9.89. A statement by Douglas Sutherland, executive secretary, said the increase would result chiefly from a cut in total assessed valuations, plus increases of $2,300,000 in the corporate levy for Cook county, $1,000,000 for the Sanitary district, and $250,000 for the Chicago Public library.

HUNDREDS FIGHT $250,000 FIRE.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 16 (AP).—Four firemen were reported injured today as hundreds of firemen and coast guards battled for two hours a $250,000 fire which destroyed four buildings in the Palmer & Parker lumber yard, a concern which processes mahogany and veneers for war purposes.

PRESS REDUCES DECEMBER USE OF PAPER 8 PCT.

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—American newspapers cut their use of newsprint—the paper on which this story is printed—from 274,471 tons used in December, 1941, to 252,399 tons in December, 1942, an 8 per cent drop, the American Newspaper Publishers association reported today.

Newsprint consumption for all of 1942 was estimated at 3,779,920 tons, a decline of 3.8 per cent under 1941 usage of 3,928,880 tons.

North American 1942 newsprint production was placed at 4,407,144 tons, against 4,785,577 in 1941.

The A. N. P. A. estimated stocks on hand and in transit at the end of December for the 422 largest newsprint users totaled 479,349 tons, or 59 days' supply.

WALKER TO GET FLYNN'S POST, DEMOCRATS SAY

National Committeemen Meet Here Tomorrow.

Early arrivals for the meetings of the Democratic national committee tomorrow indicated here yesterday that the selection of Postmaster Gen. Frank C. Walker to succeed Edward J. [Paving Blocks] Flynn as national chairman would require a minimum of time and trouble.

Almost the last vestige of doubt as to Walker's selection for the committee leadership was removed with the announcement that he would arrive in Chicago today on the Liberty Limited and go to the Edgewater Beach hotel to await the final and official action of the committee. Flynn will arrive aboard the Century today and go to committee headquarters in the Palmer House.

May Name Head by Noon.

Among the first committee officials who reached Chicago yesterday are Edwin W. Pauley, Beverly Hills, Cal., who has been committee secretary since Dec. 21, 1941, when he succeeded L. W. Robert Jr. of Atlanta, Ga., and Oscar R. Ewing of New York, vice chairman. Pauley said the meeting of the committee has been called for 10:30 a. m. tomorrow in the Palmer House and that there is a possibility the new chairman might be chosen by lunch time.

Mayor to Extend Welcome.

The city's welcome to the visiting committee members will be extended by Mayor Kelly but preliminary matters will be restricted to a minimum under plans of committee officials to keep the business of naming the new chairman under close control.

Walker is expected to retain his cabinet job of postmaster general, according to tradition, when he accepts the party chairmanship. The committee now has only one vice chairman, Ewing filling that post. Mrs. Charles W. Tillett of North Carolina, who heads the women's division, has the title of assistant chairman. Fifteen honorary vice chairmen, including former Vice President John N. Garner of Texas and Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, were not continued after the 1940 national convention.

9 REPUBLICANS AGREE TO WAIVE COMMITTEE CLAIMS FOR HARMONY

Nine Republican state representatives yesterday had informed Speaker Elmer J. Schnackenberg of willingness to forgo committee chairmanships as part of his "harmony program" in organizing the house for the 63d general assembly. There are 61 house members entitled to ask for one of the 34 committee chairmanships.

Speaker Schnackenberg believes others may join in his program. The nine are Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill of Downers Grove; R. J. Branson of Centralia, former floor leader; Calistus A. Bruer of Pontiac; Mrs. Maud N. Peffers of Aurora; Leo D. Crowley of Peoria; Robert H. Allison of Pekin; David Hunter Jr. of Rockford; Victor McBroom of Kankakee, and Warren L. Wood of Plainfield.

"These legislators are to be commended for their coöperation in helping to ease the difficult task which faces a speaker in appointing committee chairmen," Schnackenberg said.

SOUTH SEETHES UNDER THE LASH OF BUROCRACY

Revolt Against Democratic Domination Growing.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New Orleans, La., Jan. 16.—Burocracy and government by questionnaire appear to be some of the most frequently expressed causes of the growing revolt of the solid south against the Democratic party.

In an underlying current of resentment, the observer hears in this part of the south dissatisfaction directed at Washington's waste and muddling on the home front, regimentation, and the need for trimming government expenditures not essential to the war.

Some of the criticisms one hears among Louisiana farmers and business men follow the same strain as in states of the midwest and west. Larger emphasis perhaps is placed here on economic discrimination, largely thru freight rates, and of interference with rights of the states.

Foundations Gone.

Gov. Sam Jones, in suggesting a southern Democratic party, says the Democratic south is still adhering to a political party on the basis of traditional foundations, such as state's rights and tariff, which have disappeared. Some close observers here express the view that if the south were not so strongly under one party domination it might have shown results in the election last November rather similar to those in the upper Mississippi valley—due to a revolt against what is considered unfair legislation and economic discrimination.

Some of the leading Democratic newspapers in the region, while not advocating a third party, echo editorially the grievances voiced by Gov. Jones ar . other leaders. The Baton Rouge Advocate, whose publisher is Charles P. Manship, president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' association, said in a recent editorial:

"Long range grievances range all the way from lack of consideration in patronage and political favors to the drain on southern resources and to fear of 'social legislation' which might be put thru by northern legislators.

Backbone of Party.

"These conditions prevail despite the fact that the south is the backbone of the Democratic party—we might say because the south is the backbone of the Democratic party. If it were not for the solid south, the Democratic party would be chronically in about the state of the Republican party after the 1936 election."

"A Democratic administration doesn't listen very closely to our grievances, because they know we'll vote Democratic no matter what happens. Republicans won't pay us any heed for the same reason. To use an old saw, nobody runs after a street car he has already caught. We need more independence on the part of southern representatives."

The New Orleans Item, independent Democratic, in speaking of the November election, in which 50.6 per cent of the total vote of the country was polled by Republican candidates and only 47.4 by Democrats, the rest going to minor parties, noted that in the solid south the Democrats polled their usual majorities, getting 76.8 per cent of the total southern vote. It added:

"The distribution of the ballots indicates that the Republican party is becoming more and more a recourse for the folks of the small towns and country districts. The Democratic party is becoming more and more the party of the big city masses in the east while remaining as the party of the country folks and small towners in the south.

"These figures will give political speculators some new factors to ruminate."

"Economic Problem No. 1."

The Times-Picayune and the New Orleans States, two great newspapers of the south published under the same roof, opposed a third party but dwell on southern grievances. The Times-Picayune, urging independent voting, said recently: "Politics is chargeable, by and large, with more disservices than services to state and section and nation. We shall do well if we break the politician fostered fetish of political miracles, and substitute a steady independence as voters for blind adherence to a party name regardless of performance."

The States remarked editorially: "Mr. Roosevelt has taken occasion to refer to the south as economic problem No. 1. It should be no problem at all. The south has been discriminated against in many particulars. It has been given the short end of political favors.

"For years it has voted for the Democratic party and received little in return for its loyalty. Our congressmen have seen those from the north and the east walk away with all the plums, while they, like Lazarus, have had to be satisfied with the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. It is time for our congressmen to assert themselves. The south is responsible for the election of Mr. Roosevelt, at least for his second term."

Editor in Crusade.

James E. Crown, the fighting, crusading editor of the States, who was largely instrumental in uncovering the Louisiana scandals three years ago, in dwelling on the need of cutting out waste of local and state governments on nonessential activities, yesterday remarked editorially: "Must there be no rationing of government? Must all the frills and fanfares of public rule, requiring taxes and man power, be maintained?"

Lesson in Chemical Warfare

[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Weep After Test

A hundred physicians wearing gas masks stepped into a chamber filled with tear gas at Navy pier yesterday. Ordered to take off their masks, the physicians obeyed, and, after a moment, rushed, weeping, to the exit.

"That proves the masks are effective," said Capt. N. H. Fritz of the army's chemical warfare service.

The demonstration ended a three day war gas school at Northwestern university, sponsored by the office of civilian defense. The 100 physicians will conduct classes in their home areas thruout the sixth defense region.

Only eight men and one woman of the 100 students showed up for an outdoor demonstration of gases in a field across Chicago avenue from the university medical school. The nine were given sniffs of mustard gas, chloropicrin, phosgene, and lewisite. The first three smelled like garlic, flypaper, and newly cut corn. Nobody could smell the lewisite, which Capt. Fritz said should smell like geraniums.

CLOTHING FIRE INJURIES FATAL TO WOMAN, 79

Mrs. Anna O'Conner, 79 years old, was burned fatally yesterday when her clothing caught fire in her second floor apartment at 653 Barry avenue.

Her son John, 41, a night clerk in an Evanston hotel, was awakened by his mother's screams and smothered the fire with a blanket.

Mrs. O'Conner was taken to the Masonic hospital where she died. O'Conner told police that his mother smoked, and said she may have ignited her clothing while lighting a cigaret.

ATTACK POWER OF WPB IN MOVE TO QUASH CHARGE

Attacking the constitutionality of the powers of the war production board, Atty. Joseph T. Harrington yesterday filed motions in the federal District court to quash indictments against three officials of the Tyne company, a plumbing supply firm at 3228 Fillmore street, accused of priorities violations.

The indictments, returned Sept. 15, charged John J. Tyne Jr., 1201 North Euclid avenue, Oak Park; Thomas J. Fogarty, 2347 North Drake avenue, and Nicholas A. Hermes, 517 Spring street, Aurora, with impeding war work. The indictments asserted they "extended priority rulings and used false certifications, to obtain large amounts of metal needed in war production."

Harrington contended that the WPB lacks the power to rule industry because congress, in authorizing President Roosevelt to create the WPB, could not legally delegate to the bureau its power to make laws. In addition, Harrington charged that the indictment against Hermes was invalid under a Supreme court ruling because this defendant had appeared as a witness before the grand jury which indicted him.

TEACHING HATE OF FOE OPPOSED BY EDUCATORS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—Hatred of the enemy should not be taught in American public schools, the educational policies commission of the National Education association said today.

"We especially deplore the cultivation of such traits among younger children and others who are not likely to see military service," a statement added. "The spiritual casualties of war will be great enough and lasting enough without any help from the teaching profession.

"Malign indictments of entire races and nations are the characteristic weapons of dictators. They are not suitable weapons for nations conducting a great crusade for the extension of liberty and justice to all peoples everywhere."

16 CASES OF WINE STOLEN.

Mrs. Victoria Katlars, owner of a tavern at 1909 Division street, told police yesterday that burglars took 16 cases of wine valued at $144 from her establishment. They stole $180 worth of whisky the week before, she said.

ORGANIZE WORLD TIE-UP FOR PEACE NOW, SAYRE ASKS

Must Act Before War Ends, He Insists.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 16 [Special].—Military victory alone will not bring lasting peace, but must be supplemented by international political and economic organization to eliminate war's causes, Francis B. Sayre, special assistant to the secretary of state, tonight told delegates to the 76th annual state convention of the Young Men's Christian association.

The former high commissioner of the Philippines said that "once the war is won most of our bargaining power with our allies will be gone," and urged immediate action to "formulate our program and align our forces."

Would Carefully Define Powers.

He said "four fundamentals" must be achieved: "Organized international coöperation, recognition of the supreme value of human personalities and of human rights, economic freedom with equality of trading opportunity for all nations, and an international control and supervision of armament building."

In calling for international coöperation to make peace secure, Sayre said:

"This means the delegation to some international organization of certain carefully defined and restricted powers."

He asserted it must be clothed with sufficient force to prevent aggression, regulate heavy armament construction in every country, administrate and supervise backward and colonial areas, and attack "certain discriminatory and anti-social practices" in international trade and finance.

Calls for Trade Equality.

Sayre declared that "we must insist upon the enjoyment by all states, victor and vanquished," of equal access to trade and raw materials.

He declared that no serious statesmen advocate eliminating all tariff walls, but said they do advocate, "and if we are to win the objectives for which democracies are fighting they must insist upon," eliminating trade barriers which "inescapably choke the flow of international trade" and "depress" living standards.

Sayre asserted that post-war freedom must be based on "reasonable security of person and property, freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, the right to dispose of one's own labor, equality of rights before the law, complete independence of thought, and reasonable independence of action."

TRAFFIC LOSES 4,630 HOURS IN '42 TO OPEN BRIDGES

Chicago motorists and pedestrians fidgeted approximately 4,630 hours during 1942 as the city's 54 movable bridges were opened to permit passage of river traffic, ranging from lake steamers to tiny pleasure craft with tall masts.

This was disclosed by City Harbor Master William J. Lynch, who reported 73,187 bridge openings during the year averaged 3.8 minutes, compared with 75,352 openings and 3.9 minutes in 1941. The decline, he explained, is not due to fewer boats passing thru, but because one less movable bridge was in operation.

The Canal street bridge was taken out of service Oct. 28, 1941, and has not been replaced because of material priorities. That bridge accounted for 2,492 openings in 1941.

The increase of 327 openings of the 54 bridges operated both years was due to a request from the navy that gates be closed and traffic kept off the bridges when certain vessels went thru, even tho lifting of the bridges was not necessary, Lynch said. This step apparently was a precaution against sabotage of naval vessels.

Blood Donors of 2 Suburbs Set New Record for Gifts

A new record was set yesterday by the mobile blood donor units of the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross when it completed a 10 day visit in Oak Park and River Forest. The unit averaged donations of 132 pints of blood per day, totaling 1,320 pints of blood to be used for injured service men.

Fourteen years ago a practicing physician's prescription called Cystex was made available to the public through drug stores, making it easy and inexpensive to help thousands suffering from non-organic and non-systemic Kidney and Bladder troubles in these three simple ways: 1. Help the Kidneys remove excess acids which may become poisoning and irritating. 2. To palliate burning and smarting of the urinary passages, and bladder irritation. 3. Help the Kidneys flush out wastes which may become poisonous if allowed to accumulate, thus aiding nature in stimulating an increase of energy, which may easily make you feel years younger.

BURDEN OF WAR PENSIONS HITS 15 BILLION MARK

One Campaign Cost Only Fifth of Vet Pay.

BY WALTER TROHAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16.—Wars may come and wars may go, but pensions go on forever, the annual report of Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines of the veterans' administration disclosed today.

Esther Morgan.

The report reveals that pensions and other federal veterans' compensation has cost almost as much as some wars and in one case five times as much as the war itself cost.

Pension and compensation costs since the beginning of government up to June 30, 1942, totaled 15 billion dollars. Of the total 4 billion dollars was paid up to 1909 and 11 billion dollars from 1910 to 1942, inclusive.

Still Paying on War of 1812.

The longevity of pensions was emphasized by the fact that the federal government is still paying a pension for the war of 1812 altho 127 years have elapsed since the close of the war in 1815. The beneficiary is Esther Ann Hill Morgan, Independence, Ore., daughter of Pvt. John Hill, New York militia. She is receiving $20 a month.

For the Mexican war, which ended 94 years ago, the government paid out $54,966 in pensions to 94 widows.

Records of the administration show that up to last June 30, $14,019,736 was paid to living veterans and $32,197,774 to veterans' dependents of the war of 1812. This would place the pension and compensation costs of the war at approximately $46,200,000. Government records show the cost of the war itself was $86,627,000.

Veterans' administration records show $28,748,117 was paid to veterans of the war with Mexico and $32,766,900 to their dependents. The total of approximately $61,500,000 is about two-thirds of the cost of the war.

Pensions Top War Cost.

The cost of the Civil war, according to war department records, was $5,371,079,778. To last June 30 the government had paid out $8,077,072,234 in pensions and compensations to veterans and their dependents.

The high for pension costs in proportion to war costs was set by the Spanish-American war. The cost of that struggle is fixed at $321,833,254. To last June 30 the government paid out $1,504,072,722 to veterans and $288,561,616 to dependents, or a total of almost $1,800,000,000.

The cost of the World war is estimated at $21,850,000,000. In 24 years the government has paid out more than a fifth of the total cost in pensions and compensation, or a total of $4,619,487,000. This is exclusive of the $2,491,000,000 baby bond bonus bill.

WOMAN SEEKING SECOND TRIAL IN BABY KIDNAPING

A motion for a new trial for Mrs. Anne Tyrrell Lussier, who was convicted early yesterday by a jury on a charge of abducting an infant in Waukegan, will be heard at 9:30 a. m. Tuesday by Judge Ralph J. Dady of the Lake county Circuit court. The jury, which deliberated for nearly eight hours, fixed her punishment at one year in the women's state reformatory.

Mrs. Lussier, wife of Sergt. Alfred Lussier of Camp Campbell, Ky., stole Gary Botsford, 4 months old, from his carriage in downtown Waukegan on Nov. 24. She was arrested with the baby the next day at her sister's home in Zion.

Myron A. Wood, 1124 North avenue, Waukegan, who was foreman of the jury, said six ballots were taken. Several women jurors held out until the last ballot for a not guilty verdict, he said. Mrs. Lussier appeared to be astonished at the verdict.

"If it were any worse I don't think I would live to serve it," she said.

W-G-N MUSICAL STARS SCORE HIT IN "DESERT SONG"

Sigmund Romberg's musical drama of fighting in North Africa, "Desert Song," and the first of a series of talks by Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, on encroachments on the freedoms of men, featured last night's performance of the Chicago Theater of the Air. The radio program was heard over W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual Broadcasting company.

In the musical presentation, Marion Claire sang the part of Margot and Thomas L. Thomas presented the vocal rôles of the Red Shadow and Pierre. Maybelle Prindaville and Bret Morrison, respectively, took the speaking parts. With the W-G-N Symphony orchestra providing stirring background. BRIDGES LISTS 35 WITNESSES FOR FLYNN QUIZ

Urges Hull Be Summoned to Testify First.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16. — Sen. Styles Bridges [R., N. H.] today presented to the senate foreign relations committee a list of 35 witnesses whose testimony he asserted is necessary for a full investigation into the qualifications of Edward J. [Paving Blocks] Flynn, Democratic political boss, to serve as minister to Australia and as President Roosevelt's roving ambassador in the Southwestern Pacific.

Bridges said testimony of the suggested witnesses will support his charges, made on the senate floor, that Flynn's past renders him unfit to be an American envoy in a vital theater of war.

Public hearings on Roosevelt's nomination of Flynn, which has aroused criticism thruout the country, are scheduled to begin Wednesday. Sen. Tom Connally [D., Tex.], chairman of the foreign relations committee, announced that the first witnesses will be officials of the state department.

Urges Calling of Hull.

"I think the first witness called should be Cordell Hull, secretary of state, to testify as to the reasons for Flynn's nomination and as to his qualifications for the post," Bridges said in a statement filed with the committee.

Bridges, who is a leader in the senate fight against Flynn's confirmation, previously denounced the appointment as an insult to Australia. His suggestion for calling Hull as the first witness brought expressions of amusement in capital circles, because it is reported Roosevelt's nomination of Flynn met heavy opposition in the state department.

On Bridges' list of proposed witnesses are names of present and former New York City and Bronx officials and members of the grand jury which made an inquiry into charges that city owned paving blocks and city labor were used in building a courtyard on Flynn's country estate. Flynn was whitewashed by the grand jury in this scandal and the jury foreman was rewarded with a federal job.

La Guardia Also Suggested.

Sen. Bridges also suggested the names of Adolf Berle, assistant secretary of state; Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York, and others to be called in connection with allegations that while Flynn was chancellor of New York he caused the city to lose more than a million dollars, thru investment of city funds. Berle succeeded Flynn as chancellor and made a report to La Guardia denouncing Flynn's administration.

Bridges also urged the calling of Serge and Andre Rubinstein, brothers, both of New York, in connection with charges that Flynn's law firm, Goldwater and Flynn, was retained by Serge when the latter had large Japanese interests and was associated with Guiji Kassai, a registered agent of the Japanese government. Kassai was in this country until two weeks before Pearl Harbor.

It also was suggested that a former employé of Rubinstein's be summoned to tell of donations which Rubinstein's companies in Japan are said to have made to the Japanese army and navy.

CONGRESS ONLY ONE ACTIVITY OF FRANCES BOLTON

Directs Payne Fund for Aiding Youth.

BY MARCIA WINN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16.—Mrs. Frances P. Bolton of Ohio, now entering her third term in congress, often is referred to disparagingly by her opponents as "the richest woman in congress." They like to let all comment on her drop with this description, which is an unfair one of a diligent member of congress.

Rep. Frances Bolton.

Long before Mrs. Bolton was elected to fill the unexpired term of her husband, the late Rep. Chester C. Bolton, she was nationally known as a philanthropist and as an ardent advocate of higher standards for nursing, hospitals, and medical care. For even more of her work she received no personal recognition, for she did it and still does it thru the relative anonymity of the Payne fund, which she founded and directs.

Survives Purge Attacks.

In the last election the Democrats sought vigorously to unseat her, listing her as a "dangerous" member of congress and one to be purged. One weapon they sought to use against her was her wealth, the bulk of which is in trust for the Payne fund. Another was the irrelevancy [to them] of having a woman represent the Cleveland industrial district. A third was her noninterventionist stand before Pearl Harbor, a stand reflecting the views of 85 per cent of her constituents. The attacks against her were bitter and personal, but she swept unscathed back into congress.

Mrs. Bolton now is a young and beautiful 57 with a brisk and trim figure and magnificently coiffured grey hair, but she has appeared on the Washington scene off and on since 1917 when her husband served on the council of national defense and later in the war department under Benedict Crowell, assistant secretary. At that time she was instrumental in bringing about the establishment of the Army School of Nursing. Later she endowed the school of nursing bearing her name at Western Reserve university.

Turns to Work with Youth.

"It [the army school] worked very well," she recalls, "and when the war was over Ellen Crandall, executive secretary of the Public Health institute, and I sat on a red plush sofa in the Pennsylvania hotel in New York and decided to do something about influences on youth."

Out of this conversation came much of the work of the Payne fund: A study of the reading of adolescent girls; the maintenance for years of an observer at the league of nations ["My window to the world," Mrs. Bolton called it.]; establishment of the children's library at Geneva; a five year study of the social value of the motion picture, which Hollywood producers tried to squelch; a study of education in radio, which NBC tried to squelch, but out of which developed the Rocky Mountain Radio council; legal aid to land grant colleges; a civic research council under Dr. I. J. O'Rourke which evolved techniques now used by the war department in testing aptitude.

A woman of intelligence and great personal charm, she has three sons, two of whom are in the mechanized cavalry. The third, a semi-invalid, is a dairy farmer near Cleveland.

RIGGERS.

The navy is anxious to obtain applications for commissions and high ratings from men who are qualified riggers. To be considered for a commission, the applicant must be between 25 and 50 years of age, have at least a high school education, and possess 12/20 [20/40] vision in each eye, correctible to 20/20. Candidates should be able to pass a rigid physical examination, altho certain nonorganic defects may be waived in exceptional cases. Applicants should be thoroly familiar with winches, booms, riggings, and gear maintenance, and be fully qualified to accept responsibility for one or more gangs of men.

Persons with experience as ocean stevedores or as hatch bosses, or who have had considerable experience with lumber, sand, and gravel boats, etc., in inland, coastwise, or ocean going shipping, will be granted commissions from warrant officer to lieutenant commander, depending on age, education, training, and experience. Warrant officer appointees are not required to have had any certain amount of education, but they must have had practical experience.

Pier and steamship terminal superintendents, steamship executives, and junior executives who are experienced in the handling of freight or general cargo can easily qualify for senior officer commissions. The navy also will undertake to train younger men with some experience so they may qualify for appointments in the rigger battalions. Apply at the Navy Office of Officer Procurement, 141 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, or the nearest office.

J. F. E. writes: "I am 22 years of age, a graduate chemical engineer employed as such, and have an expiring 2-B classification. My vision, 20/20 in one eye and 20/200 in the other [but correctible in both eyes to 20/20], and my age have prevented me from receiving a commission. Isn't there any possibility of being accepted?"

ANSWER: You do not say how much practical experience you have had, but if you have had three or more years of practical industrial experience you may be commissioned despite your youth and vision defect. Military experience is desireable but not essential. Similarly men between ages 20 and 31, inclusive, with a degree in mechanical, electrical, or chemical engineering, fortified by three or more years of practical experience, may be commissioned, but in writing to us be sure to give a complete statement of your age, education, and physical defects if any, and a concise, detailed statement covering the nature and extent of your practical experience.

C. I. writes: "Our board has construed the directive which put men over 38 in class 4-H to apply only to men over 38 who were 1-A at the time the directive was issued. Is this correct? Or should they classify all men over 38 as 4-H? What if a man is 37 years six months and receives his induction notice on the day he becomes 38?"

ANSWER: Men who were 38 or over on the effective date of the executive order were not to be inducted by the army regardless of their classification, nor would men 38 years old arriving at the induction station be sworn in by the army.

8,000 SOLDIERS THANK W-G-N FOR ITS BROADCASTS

From Randolph field, Texas, W-G-N has received a letter expressing the thanks of 8,000 soldiers for the cheer provided by the station's programs. The letter was written by Pvt. William B. Henderson, attached to the office of the communications officer, 12th Air Base squadron.

He wrote: "For some time I have been putting off writing you because of the fact that we have been very busy. But—

"For some eight thousand soldiers here at Randolph we thank W-G-N for the wonderful programs you have given us. And we will say that we get more pleasure from your station than from any other. You give us the same and more, and we will Keep 'Em Flying."

Randolph field is well over 1,000 miles from Chicago. However, W-G-N's 50,000 watt transmitter, operating on the clear channel of 720 kilocycles, provides good coverage for regions much farther away.

THE PERVERSITY OF OUR FOREIGN POLICY.

The Japanese military had been prepared and ready at all times to do exactly what the Japanese government said was not to be done. The American government has always been ready to say it would do exactly what its military was unprepared to do. Deception was the principal element in both policies but, again, there was a difference. In America it was self-deception. The difference would have consequences. Even as Mr. Hull in Washington was denouncing Messrs. Nomura and Kurusu, the peacemakers, for presenting him with a document of "infamous falsehoods," the Japanese were sending all the American battleships to the floor of Pearl Harbor.

The state papers now being released in Washington are enlightening not because they reveal many heretofore unknown facts in our foreign relations but because they illustrate again the American policy of taking a part in international affairs which will require armed forces and ignoring the need of them. The papers undertake to prove that the American government was aware of what would happen. In anticipation it did everything except prepare itself to meet the consequences.

We know that our undeclared war started with the repeal of the neutrality act, the passage of the lend-lease act, the transfer of the destroyers, the sending of supplies to China, the denouncing of the Japanese trade treaty, and the frequent public denunciation of the aggressors in Europe and Asia. These were all acts of a powerful military nation—only they weren't. They were the acts of a nation which had everything on paper. Its factories were making automobiles, radios, sewing machines, typewriters, refrigerators, and farm implements. Its recruits were being trained with trucks labeled "tanks," gas pipes labeled "anti-tank guns," sticks called rifles, and clouds recognized as airplane squadrons.

The United States administration took up the rôle of Jupiter Tonans with an army which, as late as 1937, numbered only 158,000 men, and a navy which had not been built up to the treaty ratio. In the other war Japan did little and, after it, asked for much; the United States did much and asked for nothing. Japan's part was limited to expelling a nearby military neighbor, Germany, and its rewards were the island forts which stud the Pacific north of the equator. The United States put an army in Europe to turn the balance in favor of the allies and in return received promissory notes and criticism of its reluctance to commit itself without reservations to the problems of Europe's future.

Japan received its new island possessions under mandates prohibiting the military use of them. The nation which deals in the deception of others promptly repudiated its pledge, converted the possessions into air and naval bases, and prevented all scrutiny of its operations. The nation which deals in self-deception not only refrained from reënforcing its far Pacific defenses while under treaty obligation not to strengthen them but neglected to do so after Japan had denounced the treaty and after its approaching conflict was, as the state papers indicate, plainly perceived by the persons conducting the foreign affairs of this country.

The state department documents now being issued reveal that Mr. Hull and Mr. Roosevelt pride themselves upon the steadiness and accuracy of their prevision and the astuteness of the state department representatives in Germany, Italy, and Japan. They knew what was coming and it cannot be said that they went out of their way to avoid it. They advanced to meet it and yet when the blow fell it found our outposts unprepared.

For Pearl Harbor the excuse appears to be that neither the army nor the navy nor the authorities in Washington could conceive that a sudden attack on Hawaii could come from the air. But all the authorities knew that the Philippines were directly in the path of the Japanese forces which they had perceived were about to be let loose without warning. Yet the Philippines were caught without equipment, without supplies, without even sufficient food, and without war materials then being exported to Europe. The defenders of the Philippines looked for aid which never came.

The papers of the state department condemn American policies while undertaking to give them credit and the merit of astuteness. The reader may be struck by the number of times reference is made to the Kellogg-Briand treaty outlawing war as an instrument of national policy. Here, it would appear, was the bulwark behind which the United States thought itself protected. Is it entirely too much to hope that this nation has had its fill of such experiences with illusions? It has been very costly.

TAX SCANDALS THAT WERE FORESEEN.

Last year when State's Attorney Courtney undertook to accept recommendations of the county commissioners as to what settlements he should make in forfeiture foreclosure suits to collect taxes, some predictions were hazarded in these columns as to what might be expected. The expected is here.

We had occasion recently to remark upon the ridiculously low figure at which the county board agreed to compromise the taxes and penalties on the Illinois Women's Athletic Club building. The compromise was made at a time when the building was chock full of tenants, their rent paid by the navy department.

Since then the board has made compromises on three properties on which tax cleanups were necessary preliminaries to a sale of the land. Two of the properties were to be purchased by the Chicago housing authority and the purchase price was already in escrow for the third, desired for use as a war plant. The original compromises made were so ridiculous that the board felt constrained, when the figures became public, to raise the tax obligation, but the most that was asked was the full amount of the taxes due without any payment of penalties. Since penalties on long delinquent properties usually equal the principal of the taxes, the connivers who sought the compromise got about a 50 per cent reduction as a reward for their delinquency.

In none of these cases was there any question of inability to pay. The money was on hand, more than sufficient to pay the full taxes and penalties, and the owners of the properties couldn't put thru the sales until they did pay. If, under these circumstances, the highly advantageous compromises were put thru without a payoff, there are some boys around the county building who are a great deal less smart than their friends give them credit for being.

Compromise thru forfeiture foreclosures has resulted in the scandal that was inherent in the process from the beginning. State's Attorney Courtney sought to safeguard his own reputation by requiring recommendations from the county board before instituting proceedings. Mr. Courtney, for the protection of his own good name, ought to stop immediately every forfeiture foreclosure until the law is amended to remove the present causes of scandal. Furthermore, he should ask the grand jury to investigate some of the compromises recently made.

GOV. CARR'S WARNING.

Ralph L. Carr, retiring governor of Colorado, warned the legislature of his state that the nation will hear, perhaps in six months, of a scheme to remodel its government on shockingly dictatorial lines. In other times the warning might well have been dismissed as too fantastic and too melodramatic to deserve serious attention, but today there is nothing implausible about it. Surely there is no lack of evidence to corroborate the governor.

People have been deprived of fuel oil in areas where there is no shortage of it. Rationing is instituted to relieve fake shortages, partly stimulated by the rumor mongering of the rationers, partly traceable to the government's hoarding of food in overfilled warehouses. The war labor board uses the war as an excuse to make employers tax their employés in order to fill the treasuries of labor unions, including CIO unions controled by Communists dedicated to the destruction of our form of government. Organized attacks appear in the insect press upon the patriotism of any one who dares speak up in defense of the American way of life.

Here is the spadework of revolution. The people are confused and made dependent for food and shelter upon the political party in power. Protest is thus stifled in advance. The agents of disorder are strengthened and those who warn against the plans of the subvertists are smeared and libeled. To students of revolutionary tactics, as practiced in Russia in 1917 and developed and preached since by the Third Internationale, there is nothing novel. The pattern is familiar.

Gov. Carr described the dictatorial plot only in generalities, but from his language it appears that under the guise of a war measure some people in Washington are seeking to revive the system of regional TVA's and to replace the states of the Union with regional pro-consulates. Having destroyed the most effective agencies of local self-protection, the state governments, the planners in Washington would then be free to perfect the organization of their centralized, totalitarian state.

Congress and the legislature, the Republican governors in the north, and the Democratic governors in the south must all be on the alert to prevent this Communist revolution. The nation is well aware that to a large part of the Roosevelt administration the war is important only because it offers an opportunity to destroy republican government in this country and establish a dictatorship under the guise of war regulations.

THE COST OF LIVING.

A chart on the financial page on Thursday showed the fluctuations in average wholesale prices and in the cost of living since 1939. The chart and the statistics upon which it is based give little comfort to those who had hoped that price increases had been arrested. Since the war began average wholesale prices in the United States have gone up 35 per cent, wholesale food prices more than 50 per cent, and the cost of living nearly 20 per cent.

From September, 1939, to the end of 1942 the all-commodity price index of the United States department of labor went up 22 points. More than ½ of the rise took place in 1942. The wholesale food index has gone up 37 points since August, 1939, a little less than ½ of the advance coming in 1942. The cost of living has soared 19.2 points from August, 1939, to the end of last November; about half of the total rise took place in 1942, with OPA and Henderson, its tough administrator, on the job.

In the first 40 months of this war—that is thru December—the government's wholesale food index went up 37 points. In the last war it took only 33 months to produce an equivalent rise. The retail price of food this time has gone up 37.6 points in 40 months. The retail food price in the last war went up that much in 34 months. For the last war there are no complete cost of living figures to make a similar comparison. However, the cost of living index of the United States bureau of labor statistics has risen nearly 20 per cent since the war started. The cost of living as calculated by the national industrial conference board advanced a little less than 20 per cent in the first six months of the other World war.

These figures suggest that the Roosevelt administration has not been very much more successful in preventing prices from soaring in war time than the Wilson administration was.

Editorial of the Day

RATIONING AND AFTER.
[Spokane Spokesman-Review.]

Government officials and planners are mistaken if they think that acquiescence in an emergency rationing program means that the people like it and will consent to permanent regimentation of their lives that master minds in Washington may be enabled to experiment with social and economic theories.

If bureaucracy should think it can with impunity take advantage of the war to perpetuate its emergency authority over the public and institute a new order unsanctioned by the people, it had better reread the signs of the last election.

Yet there are indications that some planners in Washington see the war as an opportunity to do just that. There is what appears to be a broad hint of such thinking in one paragraph of Secretary of Agriculture Wickard's speech announcing the projected food rationing program to start in February, when he said: "The nations of the future must see to it that their people have enough of the right kinds of food to eat. We have made a beginning toward that end. Now is the time to go farther."

If that means anything, it means that government rationing of food purchases should continue after the war, regardless of the supply situation.

We mildly but earnestly suggest to Mr. Wickard that he and his advisers take another think before they try to force this program on America.

THE RIGHTS OF ENGLISHMEN

[The following address was made last night by Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of The Tribune, on the Chicago Theater of the Air, over W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual Broadcasting System.]

BY COL. ROBERT R. McCORMICK.

Americans have enjoyed their rights so long; Englishmen had enjoyed their rights so long; continental Europeans had lost their rights for so long, that the subject had passed from public discussion.

Beginning some 20 years ago in this country, the city, state, and national governments began attacking the freedoms of citizens. The courts upheld the freedoms, but the attacks continued and became more intense until they have developed into a veritable blitzkrieg.

In this and succeeding weeks, therefore, excepting as interrupted by necessity to comment on current events, I propose to speak upon the rights of men.

Tonight I will begin with the rights of Englishmen.

The first charter of Virginia issued by King James I. included the following quaint language: "We do declare that all and every the Persons, being our Subjects, which shall dwell and inhabit within every or any of the said several Colonies and Plantations, and every of their children, which shall happen to be born within any of the Limits and Precincts of the said several Colonies and Plantations, shall have and enjoy all Liberties, Franchises, and Immunities, within any of our other Dominions, to all Intents and Purposes, as if they had been abiding and born, within this our Realm of England, or any other of our said Dominions."

The rights of free men were general over Europe in what critics are disposed to call the dark ages, but were extinguished on the continent in the 15th and 16th centuries by the introduction of Roman law.

The rights of Englishmen were those common law rights which the Norman conquest had extinguished and which were recaptured at the time of Magna Charta and maintained against a succession of usurping kings.

Magna Charta was a treaty of peace between the king and his people and was a real constitution with a kind of supreme court to enforce it.

Most of the rights expressed in Magna Charta belonged to the feudal system and passed with it. Others survived.

What were those old rights, restored by Magna Charta?

What were the rights of women at the time of Magna Charta? Well, they had one right which you ladies who are listening to me have lost; the right to inherit property legally due them without interference by the state. Single women might be granted the right to manage their property if their overlord saw fit.

Spinsters had no other rights. They could be given in marriage to whomsoever their overlord wished.

Widows had two other rights restored to them in Magna Charta. The right of not being forced to remarry against their wills, and that of denouncing the murderer of their husband. Women could not denounce any one else for murder—not even the murderer of a father or a son. Married women had no rights.

Now what were men's rights under Magna Charta? The rights were confined to free men.

They were: The right not to be imprisoned without trial. That the courts should be held in some certain place. That the horses and wagons, wood, grain, and other chattels of free men should not be taken without their permission, and in the administration of feudal titles, as well as in certain criminal proceedings, we find the germ of the jury system. And that punishments should be in proportion to offenses.

Magna Charta was never repealed but was nullified when King Henry VII. created the court of the star chamber with unlimited powers.

Aside from yielding to the court of the star chamber, the courts of England held that the common law was paramount to acts of parliament or of the sovereign.

Came James I., son of a former queen of France, with strong ideas as to the absolute powers of the king, and demanded that the courts subordinate their judgment to his orders.

Came his son, Charles I., to further exalt the prerogatives of the king. He was resisted in parliament which forced him in writing:

To abolish the court of the Star Chamber, and in the petition of right, to forgo the customs of exacting forced loans, of billeting troops on the people, and of trying civilians by martial law.

Parliament was successful in the ensuing Civil war after which the house of commons cut off the king's head, abolished kingship, abolished the house of lords, and ruled tyrannously until it in turn was expelled by Cromwell, who ruled as a tyrant with military government until his death. The Constitution was restored with the succession of Charles II., during whose reign parliament upheld the writ of habeas corpus.

After the abdication of his brother, James II., parliament in electing William, Prince of Orange, and Mary as king and queen of England obtained from them in writing the following additions to the rights of Englishmen, called the Bill of Rights, which amounted to a contract:

The right to petition the king. The right for Protestants to have arms for their defense. That freedom of speech in parliament could not be questioned out of parliament. That excessive bail ought not to be required nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted. That parliament should be elected every three years. In 1763 and 1764 Judges Camden and Mansfield declared that the common law forbade and parliament did not permit searches and seizures by general warrant.

Therefore at the time of our revolution the rights of Englishmen which they held against the sovereign king were:

The right not to be imprisoned without trial. That the court should be held in some certain place. That property of free men should not be taken without their consent. Trial should be by jury. Punishment should be in proportion to offenses. Forced loans should not be exacted. Troops should not be billeted on the people. Civilians should not be tried by martial law. The right of habeas corpus. Citizens had the right to petition the king. Protestants had the right to bear arms. Freedom of speech in parliament should not be questioned. Excessive bail ought not to be required nor excessive fines imposed nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted. Parliament should be elected every three years. Searches and seizures by general warrants were forbidden.

In 1701 a great change came over the British government. George, the elector of Hanover, was elected king as George I. of England. This German prince did not speak a word of English and left the government to his ministers. Since then, with a brief interval during the reign of George III., the crown has been a figurehead. The power of government has reposed in parliament. This power was checked in that both houses, lords and commons, had to unite in any legislation, any impeachments, or any attainders; but in 1911 legislation was enacted depriving the house of lords of its powers and confining all power of government to the house of commons.

In 1939 and 1940 the house of commons repealed all the rights of Englishmen. At present they have no right to elect a parliament; no right to liberty; they may be imprisoned without trial; no right to property. They have no more rights than the English had under the heels of the Norman conquerors before Magna Charta.

Let us hope these rights soon will be restored and when restored, preserved by some perpetual tribunal.

THE AIR WE BREATHE.

FREEDOM from infection depends, to a considerable extent, upon the air we breathe. Long before it was proved that mosquitoes transmitted malaria and yellow fever, housewives would close the windows toward nightfall to keep out the miasma which was thought to be dangerous.

But this was before Pasteur demonstrated the vicious rôle of tiny bacteria. Thereafter, fear of inhaling contaminated air disappeared. Only recently has our attention been recalled to the fact that atmospheric currents can carry toxin producing "bugs" from one human being to another. Organisms may be spread by tiny drops of spray propelled from an inflamed throat by means of a cough or sneeze. Microbes may be projected several feet, deposited on the cuticle of a neighbor, and later carried to the mouth or the nostrils.

In addition, many invaders can resist drying. Unless scrupulous cleanliness is observed, hospital wards housing patients afflicted with tuberculosis may harbor the bacilli of this disease. When shielded from light, they can exist for weeks. In like fashion, foul material on clothing may become the source of many disorders. Sunlight is our greatest destroyer of bacteria.

Two of the most noxious varieties, the staphylococcus and the streptococcus, can survive for weeks in a dried state. The organisms of pneumonia have a strong hold upon life and can remain active for 30 days. Many of our viruses likewise are tenacious. When discharged from an infected source they can thrive in both air and dust. Those causing smallpox and polio may endure for three or four weeks.

The habit of hawking and spitting, disgusting as it is, would not be so bad were the excretions deposited in a bright, sunny area. Unfortunately, the expectorator hunts for a dark corner which may remain untouched by ordinary housekeeping for weeks. This emphasizes the importance of good personal hygiene as well as the necessity for thoro renovation in the event of illness or carelessness.

With natural respiration, few organisms will be dislodged. It is only when we give vent to a powerful blast, that huge quantities will pollute the surrounding atmosphere. Shouting has about the same effect. It has been estimated that about 800 per word will be expelled by forceful campaign orators.

Now, most of this germ laden mist will settle rapidly. Gravity [despite Einstein] is a useful force. But minute particles may float about and be rebreathed by others in the vicinity. In fact, it takes about two hours to precipitate the finer bits.

Recently the suggestion has been offered that the spraying of crowded rooms, halls, etc., will be strikingly effective in the presence of epidemic colds. Among the chemicals mentioned were sodium hypochlorite and propylene glycol. The effect is not only to destroy drifting disease producers but to facilitate their settling.

To reduce the number of acute infections, members of the family, office companions, and shop workers can use care not to add to the bacterial horde. A sneeze can be covered.

THEY SHOULD NOT.

B. W. writes: Is it harmful for a person with a duodenal ulcer to smoke?

REPLY.

Tobacco has a tendency to constrict certain fine capillaries. If the patient is immune to nicotine, well and good. I know physicians who suffer from ulcers. Nevertheless, they are smokers. In spite of this, the lesions seem to heal.

COMPENSATION.

L. A. W. writes: Is there any cure for an enlarged heart?

REPLY.

Not if you mean returning the organ to normal size. As a rule, enlargement is nature's way of remedying a defect. Spare the body's pump uncalled for strain and long life will be yours.

NOT AS A RULE.

M. F. writes: Can sciatica be detected by X-rays?

REPLY.

Only when the disorder is accompanied by changes in the skeleton.

DELIVERY SERVICE.

J. C. S. Writes: Is hypnotism of any value to a woman in delivering a child?

REPLY.

It has been employed. It is a good stunt but not practical.

HOW TO GET MORE NURSES.

Chicago, Jan. 7.—It amused me to read in the article about the shortage of nurses where the hospitals intend to glamorize and publicize the nursing profession in order to get girls to enter training. A girl who chooses nursing as a profession does not enter for glamor. If she does, she will not last.

The nurse in training does not mind the hard work for three years without compensation because she is constantly reminded of the wonders and idealism of the nursing profession. But what happens after she graduates? She seeks other positions because there is more attraction in salaries and hours.

The salary is poor. There is no social security or other old age protection by any nursing organization. The nurse is charged fully by the hospital she works in in case of illness. No sick leaves during the year, no vacations with pay, or increase in salary with seniority. The hospitals never hired enough nurses even when they were plentiful. So the nurse always works overtime without extra pay. The first day the number of patients decreases the nurse is sent off for the rest of the day without pay, even tho she had worked overtime every day the previous week.

This war is a very good alibi for the hospitals. Does any one remember a hospital with oversupply of nurses before the war? R. N.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Nurses are wanted. One suggestion to get them is to glamorize the profession. That isn't needed. Instead, increase the wages. At present the general duty floor nurse, working a 48 hour week, makes little more than a good housemaid [if you can get one]. From the nurse's salary of an average $90 a month, she has to pay for an apartment, food, laundry, insurance, taxes, dues, license, stockings, toiletries, and other common necessities. Solution to "Nurses Wanted": Increase by 15 to 20 per cent the salary of this underpaid fixed income class? No. Just double their present salary. PHYSICIAN.

THE GREAT JAP KIDNAPING PLOT.

Chicago, Jan. 10.—Your editorial, "If Mr. Roosevelt Had Gone to Sea," added a touch of much needed levity to a situation which had assumed near catastrophic proportions in the headlines of some newspapers.

If abducted Mr. Roosevelt could have watched from afar the inspiring and breath taking performance of his country men in making high speed preparations for all-out victory.

I should be the last to suggest that Henry Wallace would have been an entirely acceptable substitute in the President's absence, but surely such a condition would have proved to Mr. Roosevelt the ability of the American people to carry on without benefit of a fourth term. CARL M. RHODES.

DELAY IN ASSIGNING TEACHERS.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—Will the mayor, the president of the school board, or the superintendent please tell me why assignments are not made in our public schools? I feel that our children are entitled to have regular teachers rather than substitutes. No assignment of teachers has been made for the last three or four years, except in special fields. ONE INTERESTED PARENT.

SOLDIERS' MAIL.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—The latest order from the postoffice department in regard to service men's mail is entirely too severe. Clothing and food could be eliminated, but to deprive them of all reading matter is too much and I am sending a protest to the postmaster general and to our representative in congress. My son has been located in an isolated mountain camp for a year. The nearest village is six miles. No U. S. O. and no American newspapers, no magazines, or any other reading matter. I have been sending him a package of papers and magazines once a week, which takes one month to reach him. I suggested that since they were so old when he received them, perhaps he would like something else. Back came this answer: "Don't stop sending reading matter; it's like manna from heaven and is shared by all until worn out. The boys don't like V-letters. They seem just a message." JUST ONE MOTHER.

THE NEW CHAMPION.

Joliet, Ill., Jan. 11.—According to your story today, it is claimed that Alan Dale Doering is the youngest war bond owner in the country. I believe that my niece, Barbara Ann Karl, has this record beat as she was the owner of a bond at the age of 2 days, and Mr. Doering is 2 months old. MRS. HARRY BAHER.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 11.—As to youngest war bond owners, my daughter, Marigene Lou Wellentin, born on Nov. 29, was the owner of a bond on Dec. 5, being then less than one week old. MARVIN L. WELLENTIN.

BAKED MUSKRAT.

East Chicago, Ind., Jan. 10.—I see by the papers that muskrats are on sale—as food. When I was a young man our crowd hunted muskrats for the fur. We got 20 cents a pelt. We would remove the musk bag, disjoint the carcass, leave it in salt water over night, then bake the shoulders and hams as you would a roast, basting with bacon grease until well done.

This was a very palatable dish, and why not? A muskrat is an underwater vegetarian and washes all his food. OLD TIMER.

CONVINCED ON ONE POINT.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—What have "H. T." and "J. E." to yell about on getting "20 cents for a tire"? Pretty lucky, I call them. I donated two unused recapped tires to the cause, got a slip showing 40 cent value for two scrap tires, and thanks for my gift. I complained to the Defense Supplies corporation and accused them of either incompetence or dishonesty. I received a reply convincing me they were competent. WM. G. BOARD.

IT'S ALL FREE.

Evanston, Ill., Jan. 11.—Secretary Wickard commands the American people to reduce their butter diet by one-third in order to give it to our friends across the waters thru lend-lease. At the same time he advises us to use oleomargarine in its place. It does not make sense. The beneficiaries of lend-lease should be just as pleased to get the oleomargarine; it's for nothing anyway. Such discrimination against our own people by our supposed servants in high places should not go uninvestigated. And further, the originators of these goofey "directives" should be punished in other ways than by mere removal or transfer from one public pay roll to another. ALBERT KLINGER.

FREE WANT AD.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—On Wednesday, Dec. 30, my "worst bargain" was printed in the Inquiring Camera Girl's column. From that day until now I have been receiving letters, especially from out of town, and personal visits from people interested in buying a moving picture projector. My machine, a 35 mm., was larger than the average person uses, but there were a few who wanted that size, and I am glad to say I sold the machine. My thanks to Freida Zylstra for stopping me that day for the interview. MARYE DAY.

TRIBUTE TO GOOD REPORTING.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—I should like to express my appreciation for the fine cooperation rendered by your newspaper in furthering public information regarding action taken at the recent meeting of the state commission for handicapped children. Miss Fitzpatrick, your reporter who covered the meeting, did an excellent job, and the story appearing in THE TRIBUNE Jan. 5 was highly satisfactory. LAWRENCE J. LINCK, Executive Director.

MILITARY PLANE ACCIDENTS.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—We had better get this war over pretty soon, or we won't have any of our flyers left, at the rate they are being killed in training accidents. The number of these accidents is unbelievable, and yet little or nothing is done to remedy the situation. Today's papers alone show 30 dead in the last 24 hours. L. A. JORDAN.

ACCURATE REFLECTION OF CAMPUS LIFE.

Iowa City, Ia., Jan. 11.—Let me thank you for the excellent pictures of "Youth on the Campus" of the University of Iowa which appeared in your Sunday edition of Jan. 10. VIRGIL M. HANCHER, president.

WOMEN'S WORKING HOURS.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Please tell me how many hours a week a woman is permitted to work in the state of Illinois. H. S.

"No female shall be employed in any mechanical or mercantile establishment or factory or laundry or hotel or restaurant or barber shop or beauty parlor or telegraph or telephone establishment or office thereof or any place of amusement or by any person, firm or corporation engaged in any express or transportation or public utility business or by any common carrier or in any public or private institution or office thereof, incorporated or unincorporated in this state more than eight hours during any one day, nor more than 48 hours in any one week." Ill. R. S. Chap. 48, Sec. 5.

The act excepts, with certain qualifications, nurses, phone and telegraph operators with sleeping facilities, emergency operation of public utilities, canning establishments in season, nonmercantile long day staggered with a short day, and mercantile nine hour day or 54 hour week for not over four weeks per year. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

INTEREST ON MORTGAGE.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—We have a $1,000 mortgage on our home. At the time the mortgage was made it was understood that it could not be paid off except for the entire amount, at the end of five years, on April 1, 1945, because of the broker's bookkeeping expenses. I shall be able to pay off the mortgage this coming April, two years in advance of the date due. Can the broker be forced to accept the money without my paying him the interest for the full five years? C. N.

The answer is no.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

GAS REBATE.

Hammond, Ind., Jan. 6.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Until July 1, 1942, we were property owners and residents of the city of Chicago. We understand there is to be a refund made to users of gas during the period we were in Chicago. Are we entitled to this refund altho we are not now residents of Chicago? F. N.

The fact that you are nonresident would not alter your present rights. We suggest that you ask the gas company to let you know when the refunds are made, if they are made. In other words, you should give the company your address.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ABSENT HUSBAND.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—I have been separated from my husband for seven years and have not seen him for six years. I should like to marry again. May I do so without a divorce? P. J.

1. While there is a general presumption of death growing out of seven years' unexplained absence, we advise against marrying in reliance on the mere presumption. A new marriage would be invalid if it should turn out that the previous husband is still living and undivorced.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

CEILING CAME DOWN.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—While I was sitting in our front room the other day, half of the ceiling came down, damaging my furniture. Is the landlord responsible for the damage? G. B.

He would not be liable on the bare facts stated. You would have to prove that he was in some way to blame.

FIND HOUSEWIVES CHEERFULLY BUY MEAT AVAILABLE

Dealers Report Illegal Sales Have Ended.

Chicago housewives were complimented last night by George Dressler, president of the Central Retail Meat Dealers association, for coöperating with the family butcher in the face of a meat shortage. At the same time, he said reports from trade circles had convinced him that illegal sales in violation of office of price administration ceilings had, at least temporarily, disappeared.

"Our members report that their customers are voluntarily reducing their orders so that all regular patrons can be supplied from supplies on hand," Dressler said.

Jobbers to Hotels Complain.

One group that is perhaps more chagrined by meat conditions than any other is the meat jobbers who supply hotels. Members contend that the hotels and restaurants are buying meat directly from the packing houses when the jobbers themselves can't buy.

Armand Bastien, president of the National Association of Hotel and Restaurant Meat Purveyors, said that he and Ely M. Aaron, association counsel, would leave for Washington, D. C., tomorrow to discuss meat rationing with OPA officials.

A statement by John F. Manierre, OPA regional enforcement attorney, yesterday indicated that his investigators were making a survey of the retail and wholesale meat market in Chicago. He said legal action may be forthcoming next week if the findings warrant it.

Market conditions in Chicago affecting other curtailed products were reported as follows:

TIRES.

Michael F. Mulcahy, metropolitan area OPA administrator, said that any possible evasions of regulations in tire sales probably were ended by gas rationing. He said that any one with the gasoline to drive now could get a new tire if he needed one and had his needs approved by a tire inspector.

GASOLINE.

Despite talk of dealers obtaining excess coupons from truck drivers or of shortening their inventories and selling gasoline gained on the sly, Bradley M. Provis, president of the Gasoline Retailers' association of Chicago, denied any extralegal gasoline market existed in this area.

SUGAR.

One large wholesaler, typical of the Chicago sugar distributing business, said that distributors had more than adequate supplies to meet all orders. No illegal market has been reported.

COFFEE.

Wholesale coffee and tea dealers reported that they were able to fill all orders, tho some expressed concern over the size of their inventories. A 30 day supply was the average stock. None had heard of a black market in coffee.

FLOOR TAX LAW VIOLATOR GETS 30 DAYS IN JAIL

Sol. D. Neidorf. owner of a liquor store at 1660 West 47th street, first violater of the liquor floor tax law to be convicted in Chicago, was sentenced to 30 days in jail yesterday by Federal Judge William H. Holly.

Seized while transporting seven cases of liquor in his automobile, Neidorf was found guilty of having stored 200 cases of liquor in the attic of his mother's home at 3009 West 19th street with intent to defraud the government of taxes, with penalties, of $592.

His mother, Mrs. Sarah Neidorf, was discharged.

BIG ILLINOIS G.O.P. STRIDES IN HOUSE SINCE 1933 CITED

Party Boasts a Climb from 6 to 19 Seats.

BY WILLIAM STRAND.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16.—The Illinois Republican delegation in the house has risen from a 1933 low of 6 members, relegated to comparatively unimportant places in legislative affairs, to its present 19 members holding seats on all top committees and most minor ones. Rep. Leo Allen, Galena, chairman of the delegation, pointed out here today.

Rep. Charles S. Dewey.

Should the Republicans gain control of the chamber next election, it is thought likely that Illinoisans will sit high in majority councils and that all measures before congress will feel the impact of their opinions.

Dewey Gets New Job.

The latest Illinoisan to be elevated to an important committee is Rep. Charles S. Dewey, Chicago, assigned to a seat on ways and means.

Much credit for the delegation's rise to a position of power in the house should go to Rep. Allen, according to veteran observers. Allen is in his sixth consecutive term.

Allen, small, and a bit bald, is known for his quiet shrewdness and stubborn persistence in representing his colleagues in party conferences. Besides being chairman of the Illinois G. O. P. and its member on the committee on committees, he is a high ranking member of the rules committee.

List Committee Posts.

LEO E. ALLEN—Committee on committees, chairman of delegation, committee on accounts, rules committee.

ANTON J. JOHNSON—Agriculture.

C. W. BISHOP—Mines and mining, library, public buildings and grounds, census, selective committee wildlife resources.

FRED BUSBEY—World war veterans' legislation.

LESLIE C. ARENDS—Military affairs, patents.

WILLIAM H. WHEAT—Naval affairs.

CHARLES S. DEWEY—Ways and means.

RALPH A. CHURCH—Rivers and harbors.

JESSIE E. SUMNER—Banking and currency.

SID SIMPSON—Merchant marine and fisheries.

ROBERT B. CHIPERFIELD—Foreign affairs.

EVAN HOWELL—Interstate and foreign commerce.

CHAUNCEY REED — Judiciary, coinage, weights and measures.

CHARLES W. VURSELL—Civil service, education, claims.

JAMES V. HEIDINGER—Patents, territories, election No. 1.

A number of new G. O. P. congressmen tentatively have been assigned to standing committees on which Illinois was not represented in the last session.

DISCHARGED SOLDIER DIES.

William Holmes, 22 years old, 1918 22d street, North Chicago, who was discharged from the army two months ago because of a physical disability, died Friday, apparently of a heart attack, in front of 2130 Kristan street, North Chicago.

REPORTS 40,000 IDLE THRU FEAR OF JOB FREEZING

Workmen Receiving State Unemployment Aid.

There are 40,000 Illinois workmen on the rolls of the Illinois unemployment compensation getting an average of $13 to $14 per week from that agency's treasury. The 40,000 represent a ready army of workers needed in the state's essential industries and agriculture, but they won't work because they fear possible freezing of jobs by the war man power commission may catch them in a low paying job.

"A tradesman who can get $1.87½ an hour is afraid to work for 80 or 90 cents an hour in an airplane assembly plant, and a southern Illinois coal miner is afraid to help out the farmers at harvest time for $3 a day because of the danger that he might be frozen to his part-time occupation," Francis B. Murphy, state labor department director, said yesterday.

Urges Definite Assurance.

"The worker should have definite assurance that he will be able to return to his regular occupation when an opening occurs."

Murphy sent a letter to that effect yesterday to Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the WMC, requesting an immediate decision.

McNutt's commission last week froze all war workers to their jobs in Cleveland. Nonferrous miners also have been frozen to their jobs in Colorado. Murphy said that patriotic men and women are being kept out of essential work by WMC's fiat.

The unemployment compensation benefits range upward to $18 a week and may be paid to an individual as long as 20 weeks a year.

"Skilled workers are waiting for assurance that in accepting lesser jobs they won't prejudice their future security," Murphy said in his letter to McNutt.

Makes Pleat to McNutt.

"Thousands of workers are drawing job insurance benefits under the Illinois unemployment compensation act, but until they hear from Washington that they won't be frozen in lower paid jobs, should a chance for employment in their usual occupation arise, they will continue to make every effort to find work fitting their highest skills.

"We believe that the problem of bringing about the greatest possible employment of workers in essential industries would be greatly facilitated by an immediate and definite statement from the war man power commission that workers will not be frozen in jobs that do not require their highest skills.

"This problem of allaying the fears of thousands of workers in Illinois and other states is important, not only from an administration standpoint but also is essential to national morale."

Bank Sues to Foreclose Bryn Mawr Country Club

It asks accounting of all property subject to lien and a deficiency decree in the event sale of the property fails to realize the full amount due.

WAR BOOSTS ALL AREA BUILDING TO NEW RECORD HIGH

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Construction of war plants, army and navy work, and war workers' homes boosted the total of new building of all types in the Chicago area last year to more than one-third of a billion dollars, the largest volume in the history of the metropolitan area. The total was $362,888,853, compared with $140,710,822 during 1941. Of this amount, according to Bell Savings and Loan association in its monthly survey of Chicago area building activities, $337,642,964 was war building, divided as follows: army and navy, $59,500,000; industrial, $252,265,093; war workers' homes [6,833], $25,877,871.

Home building in the metropolitan area got off to a good start in 1942 but with constantly increasing and conflicting federal restrictions slowed to an almost record low. There were only 116 permits for homes issued last month in the entire area, with a value of $524,231, compared with 926, valued at $5,373,461 in December, 1941. These totals include Chicago, suburban towns and unincorporated areas in Cook, Du Page, Lake, and Kane counties.

Suburban Home Building Drops.

In the 89 suburbs reporting, home building also dropped to the lowest point in years: 91 homes, costing $452,296, compared with 450 at $2,836,476 in December, 1941.

Hammond, Ind., led all Chicago suburbs in the number and cost of new war homes built last year, with 732, valued at $3,128,000. Gary was next with 558 homes, $2,253,379. Then came Westchester, 237, $1,186,500; Lansing, 209, $932,500; Broadview, 204, $994,525; Elmwood Park, 130, $594,024; Harvey, 101, $337,740.

Housing Called Grave Problem.

"Housing is the grave problem of 1943 and it must be solved patriotically and with due regard for American standards of living," said Arthur G. Erdmann, president of Bell savings. "No one questions that the building industry is prepared to meet this problem or that ample funds are available to finance all homes needed."

A comparison of new building of all types in 1942 with 1933 shows that last year's construction in the suburbs totaled $218,979,501 against $4,139,004 in 1933. Chicago's permits totaled $30,205,121 last year compared with $3,683,960 in 1933.

Ration Board Rents Space in Standard Oil Building

The first floor corner space in the Standard Oil building, southwest corner Michigan avenue and 9th street, has been rented and occupied by the first ward rationing board.

Flat Buying May Be Leader of 1943 Market

Investment in apartment properties promises to be the outstanding phase of real estate activity this year, according to Fred M. Lorish of Swan-Lorish, Inc., and former president of the Chicago Real Estate board.

"Notwithstanding governmental restrictions and rent control, there is a steady demand for multiresidential real estate and prices are definitely higher," he said yesterday. "A greater number of ready buyers, fewer available properties and improved methods of financing are factors contributing to this betterment of the apartment building market.

"Regulation of rents has been considered a temporary handicap, but it also has prevented inflation of realty values so that choice properties still may be purchased well under their replacement costs.

"Occupancy today is at a higher level than at any time since the early '20s, so the rental situation has contributed to the desirability of apartment properties."

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 16 [Special].—Americans may view 1943 with the "utmost confidence" but should realize that, if the war is to be won in 1944, all the preparations must be finished by the end of December, Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the war production board, declared tonight. "We have to do that even if it inconveniences every one in the country—and it probably will," he asserted.

Nelson, who came here to receive the gold medal award of the Poor Richard club on the eve of the anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, asserted that America was now working at the rate of 10 years' normal production in one.

Tells Value of Press.

Recent restrictions on the use of newsprint, zinc, and other materials used in the printing of newspapers were cited by Nelson as examples of the lengths to which the WPB was compelled to go to conserve man power, electric power, and transportation for more essential military uses.

"We fully appreciate," he declared, "that the press is an institution as well as an industry—an institution which is absolutely essential in a democratic community, especially so in time of war, but notwithstanding our appreciation of that fact, we have had to curtail the newspapers' use of vital materials."

Predicts More Sacrifices.

The nation is facing a host of difficult problems, man power shortage, shortages in fuel and power and transportation, difficulties in getting raw materials and finished parts to the places where they are needed most, complex problems in regard to our food supply—all of which would have direct and unpleasant effects upon all in their daily lives, Nelson said.

"It may be that years of a greater effort than we have yet made are ahead of us," Nelson said. "Nevertheless, the people of this country are entitled to feel a sober pride in the way they have met the task."

U. OF C. WILL TEST AVIATION GROUND SCHOOL PUPILS

Men and women who have applied for entrance to the new course for aviation ground school instructors at the University of Chicago will be interviewed and subjected to qualifying tests tomorrow and Tuesday in the graduate education building, 5835 Kimbark avenue.

C. O. Houle, assistant professor of education who is in charge of the course, said three classes for instructors in elementary ground school work and four in secondary training will be conducted. The primary instruction will cover air regulations, navigation and meteorology, while advanced students will be given training in general service and operation of aircraft, power plants, instruments, and parachutes.

Houle said the demands of the army, navy, civil aeronautics administration and private flying schools for instructors afforded wide employment opportunities in the future to graduates of the course.

BUILDING BUYING BY GOVERNMENT CUTS TAX YIELDS

Reduction in Revenue $1,000 Daily.

Chicago and Cook county will lose about a thousand dollars a day in tax revenue as a result of federal government purchases of large Chicago real estate properties last year, a survey revealed yesterday. Federal government property is tax exempt.

Among the biggest purchases reported were those of the Stevens and Chicago Beach hotels and the Sprague-Warner warehouse, all for the army, and the America Fore office building for the railroad retirement board.

Last Year's Payments Cited.

County Assessor John S. Clark said that former owners paid $340,811.19 in Chicago and Cook county taxes on the two hotels and the office building last year. He pointed out that future payments would have been larger because of a higher tax rate.

The loss, however, probably will not be felt until 1944 since none of the large purchases was made before April 1, the annual tax day. It is possible, however, that the government may demand that taxes be paid only up to the time of the purchase. This was suggested once before when the government bought a building near the stockyards, but local tax officials stood their ground and the suggestion was dropped.

Record of Payments.

Stevens hotel, building valuation, $5,646,751; land valuation, $1,349,533; taxes paid to city and county, $256,015.11.

Chicago Beach hotel, building valuation, $474,736; land valuation, $588,751; taxes to city and county, $38,916.26.

America Fore building, building valuation, $1,082,305; land valuation, $171,480; taxes to city and county, $45,879.81.

CHICAGO SCHOOLS FIRST TO REQUIRE MILITARY COURSE

The youths in Chicago's high schools who face possible military induction under the selective service system will begin Feb. 1 a required course of study designed to train them for military life.

The course, called pre-induction training, is part of a general war training program formed under Supt. William H. Johnson as the first of its kind in the country, it was announced yesterday by the Chicago board of education.

Johnson and other officials of the board went to Washington, D. C., last summer for a conference with military officials who, he said, had envisioned a nation-wide program for training upper classmen in high schools. Chicago's schools are the first to begin courses under this plan.

Pre-Flight Course Elective.

Accompanying the pre-induction course will be a pre-flight course for youths who intend to seek service in the air forces, Johnson announced. The pre-flight course, he explained, will be an elective study for both boys and girls. The pre-induction course will be open to girls who desire it, Johnson said.

In a list of textbooks prepared under the direction of Don C. Rogers, district superintendent in charge of textbooks and building survey, it was shown that more than 25 other courses are planned as a part of the war training program in the schools.

Includes Radio and Languages.

Some of these are military training, patriotic songs, Latin-America, radio code, Eurasia, democracy, social studies, health and safety, and the French, Polish, German, Italian, Spanish and Czechoslovak languages.

Rogers said one of the most important courses will be the study of maps, charts, and globes.

"The study of globes is one of the most important factors in modern schooling," he said. "The flat maps of the old school days will not serve adequately in these days of air travel. This course will be stressed in all of Chicago's schools."

Ask Fund to Aid 100,000 Heart Disease Sufferers

The Chicago Heart association announced yesterday that more than 100,000 residents of Chicago are suffering from some form of heart disease. The announcement was made in connection with the association's annual sale of Valentine seals, which are on sale at headquarters, 203 North Wabash avenue. Sale of the seals benefits victims of cardiac diseases.

STATE INFANTILE PARALYSIS UNITS PUSH FUND DRIVE

Illinois' 100 chapters of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis yesterday marshaled their forces to participate in the nation-wide campaign for funds to combat an expected increase in poliomyelitis during 1943. The drive ends Jan. 30.

Mass migrations of war workers inevitably will produce epidemics during the coming polio season from May to October, the foundation said. A rise in the number of cases also was feared because a decline, like that reported last year, is perennially followed by an unusually severe epidemic year, it was explained.

In 1942 the disease claimed 3,980 new victims in the United States, the lowest figure since 1938. Of these 262 were recorded in the Chicago area where victims received aid thru the Cook county chapter, one of 2,492 foundation units operating in the nation's 3,050 counties.

STEAL LIQUOR FROM TAVERN.

George Damales, owner of a tavern at 1620 Van Buren street, reported to the police yesterday that burglars stole 15 bottles of liquor, a quantity of cigarettes, and $20.

Champaign, Ill., Jan. 16 [Special].—Paced by Andy Phillip, who scored 23 points to run his three game total to 68, the University of Illinois basketball team routed Iowa tonight, 61 to 41, before 6,576. It was the third Big Ten victory in three starts for the defending champions and was Iowa's second loss in three conference games.

The Hawkeyes took a 3 to 2 lead shortly after the opening of the game, but were never in the battle thereafter. Only the ball hawking of Forwards Tom Chapman and Ben Trickey, who totaled 18 and 8 points, respectively, kept Iowa in the game.

Coach Doug Mills used 15 Illinois players, leaving only Phillip in the game after the 30 minute mark. Phillip, who hit 10 field goals in 33 attempts, along with 3 free throws, scored 19 and 24 points, respectively, against Michigan and Wisconsin.

Others Score Evenly.

Altogether, the Illini took 108 shots and connected on 27. The Iowans hit 13 of 67 shots from the floor. It was the second time this season that the Illinois have passed the 60 point mark, having scored 69 against Nebraska.

Exclusive for Phillip, the Illinois scoring was balanced. Ed Parker, who started his third consecutive game in place of the injured Ken Menke, had nine, and Art Mathisen, Gene Vance, and Jack Smiley, the other three regulars scored six each. Menke played briefly and made five points.

Chapman, Iowa co-captain, ran his season scoring total to 115 points in seven games.

WISCONSIN WINS, 55-34

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 16 [Special].—Wisconsin's basketball team connected on 22 of its 51 shots tonight and routed Michigan, 55 to 34. This avenged the 38 to 34 defeat suffered here last night.

To counter-act the zone defense which Michigan used last night the Badgers employed a fast break which was so successfull that they led, 34 to 13, at the half.

Wisconsin dominated play around both back boards and particularly in the second half easily broke up the Wolverines' set offense.

Walt Lautenbach led the Badgers with 14 points. Johnny Kotz, last year's Western conference scoring champion, was held to 11 by Sophomore Dave Strack. Last night Strack limited Kotz to seven points.

In contrast to last night's battle when the led changed 16 times, Wisconsin was always in front after the first minute.

Reserves Finish Game.

The 4,000 fans cheered as Michigan spurted briefly as the second half opened and on two free throws and a basket by Jim Mandler cut the gap to 34 to 17. Mandler was high man for Michigan with 10 points, 7 of them coming in the second half.

Fred Rehm, Lautenbach, and Bob Sullivan hit for the Badgers while Leo Doyle and Strack were scoring for Michigan on long shots and the count was 40 to 21. Kotz picked up two quick baskets, one on a push spot and the other a hook from the corner and the Badgers ran the count to 49 to 23.

With five minutes remaining, each team sent in reserves and in the wild scramble that marked the final minutes the Wolverines managed to reduce the lead five points.

IRISH BEAT N. U. FOR 6TH IN ROW; DE PAUL VICTOR

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Notre Dame won its fifth consecutive game in its basketball series with Northwestern last night in the Stadium, 49 to 36. It was the sixth victory of the season for the undefeated Irish and while there was no doubt of the outcome after the first eight minutes, the conquest was of the same material from which all Notre Dame-Northwestern athletic contests are woven.

In the second game of the Stadium double header De Paul went into high gear to outspeed a fast, crafty Western Michigan quintet, 57 to 44. The Demons' height, which they used to control both back boards, was a prime factor and De Paul's two big centers, George Mikan and Frank Wiscons, played a stellar part in the triumph which was De Paul's 12th in 13 games this season.

Notre Dame had whipped Northwestern earlier in the season on the same court, 53 to 44. The four other Irish victories were over Wisconsin, Purdue, Western Michigan college and Ball State of Muncie, Ind.

Wildcats Just Can't Hit.

Eight thousand watched Notre Dame continue its victory march. They saw a Wildcat quintet that was as cold as it was hot a week ago when Northwestern scored 65 points only to lose to Wisconsin. The Wildcats tonight needed eight and one-half minutes to get their first field goal and then failed to score for 10 minutes in the second period.

Northwestern couldn't even match the Irish in personal fouls, losing this tabulation 20 to 10. This was not a rough game, however, for the fouls were those sly pushes and short holds which serve no purpose except to slow up the contest and produce monotony by the parade to the penalty line.

Charley Butler and Bob Rensberger led Notre Dame's first half assault which ended with the Irish leading, 22 to 16. In these 20 minutes, Otto Graham, bellwether of the Northwestern attack, was held to one free throw. Graham's failure was reflected by his mates, too, for the Wildcats trailed 8 to 1 at the end of 8½ minutes. Then Bobby Jake scored on a pass from Graham on a quick break.

Close Only Briefly.

The Irish went on to pile up a 12 to 4 advantage and while Capt. Russ Wendland, Bud Hasse, and Graham pulled up within two points at 12 to 10, Notre Dame never was seriously pressed. After a 15 to 14 score — the best Northwestern showing — Notre Dame breezed to a 6 point half time lead, altho Rensberger sat on the bench because he had acquired three personal fouls.

Orlando Bonicelli, a substitute guard, started the second half scoring for Notre Dame and John Niemiera followed with another field goal. Hasse and Graham got five penalty shots but Notre Dame led, 32 to 21, before Graham scored from the field for the Wildcats after 10 minutes of play.

Three minutes later Hasse counted on a follow-up but the Wildcats still were behind 10 points. With six minutes to play Notre Dame led, 38 to 30, and then, with superior speed and ball handling, built up a 44 to 30 lead. Substitutes finished the game for both teams.

Mikan Has a Big Night.

Before Mikan was excused with 10 minutes to play, he scored six field goals and a free throw for De Paul against Western Michigan. Wiscons, who replaced him, hit for two field goals and three penalty shots. The most pleasing aspect of the contest, from De Paul's side of the court, was the excellent work of John Jorgenson. The lanky sophomore finally lived up to his advance billing by slipping thru the defense for seven field goals and two free throws to become high scorer of the contest.

Western Michigan had an early start, leading 8 to 7, with nine minutes to go in the first half. A rally then gave the Demons an intermis-

The University of Chicago basketball team started fast against Indiana's Hoosiers in the Midway fieldhouse last night, but after recovering from the initial shock, the Hoosiers went ahead to overpower the Maroons, 55 to 27, for their third straight Western conference victory this year, and the Maroons' 33d straight Big Ten loss. The Hoosiers have won 10 consecutive games. Ralph Hamilton, Hoosier junior forward, led the scoring with 12 points on six baskets.

Chicago scored first on two baskets by Bob Oakley, led for the first nine minutes of the game, and held a tie at 7 to 7 for another three minutes, forcing the ball into Indiana territory virtually the whole time. The drive wore out, however, as Hamilton, Ed Denton, and Ward Williams brought Indiana an eight point lead, and the Hoosiers forged to a 23 to 11 margin at the half.

In the second half, Indiana got eight baskets while allowing Chicago three by midperiod. The Indiana second string widened the gap in the final minutes despite a Chicago stand which held up scoring for four minutes as the end of the game neared. Lineup:

PURDUE WINS, 49-42

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 16 [Special].—Purdue's basketball team, capitalizing on superior height and superlative marksmanship, won its second consecutive Big Ten victory here tonight as it defeated Minnesota, 49 to 42. The loss was the Gophers' second in three Western conference starts.

Ed Ehlers, Purdue guard, led the scorers with seven baskets and four free throws for 18 points. Wesley Windmiller, Gopher sophomore forward, paced Minnesota's scoring with 15 points off seven baskets and one free throw.

Ten points separated the teams at the half, when Purdue led, 32 to 22. The Boilermakers ran wild early in the second period, scoring 12 points while limiting the Gophers to 4. Minnesota staged a belated rally near the end of the game, but the attack bogged down when Louis Brewster, sophomore guard, went out on fouls.

Hawks Fight to 1-1 Deadlock with Red Wings

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 16 (AP).—The Chicago Blackhawks slipped a goal past Johnny Mowers in the last 10 minutes tonight to gain a 1 to 1 tie with the Detroit Red Wings in a National Hockey league game before 12,655. Cully Dahlstrom fired the puck home for Chicago to offset Rookie Johnny Holota's first period goal.

Seemingly headed for his fourth shutout of the season, Mowers was beaten from close in at 10:33 of the final period as Dahlstrom slipped inside Detroit's defense and took a perfect pass from Cliff [Fido] Purpur. Mowers was compelled to make only 11 saves all night, six in the second period, while Bert Gardiner handled 31 chances.

Hawks Protest Holota's Goal.

Sixty-six seconds from the end of the first period Holoto, marking up his second major league goal, poked the puck thru Gardiner's legs in a scramble in front of the cage. Gardiner and the Hawks protested vigorously that the disc had not gone in but they were overruled by Referee Bill Chadwick.

The tie, eighth of the season for Detroit, kept the two rivals deadlocked for the year at two victories each and two ties.

The Hawks, unable to win on Detroit ice for three seasons, might have won with a few breaks. In the first period Bill Thoms pulled Mowers

BOB FELLER MARRIES WAUKEGAN GIRL IN ELABORATE CEREMONY

BY RITA FITZPATRICK.

With his famous pitching hand shaking, Bob Feller, former star of the Cleveland Indians and now chief specialist in gunnery for the navy, placed a wedding ring on the finger of Miss Virginia Winther of Waukegan last night in a colorful candlelight ceremony in the First Methodist church of Waukegan.

Handsome in his navy dress uniform and quite somber, due to the death of his father, William Feller of Van Meter, Ia., last week, Bob, accustomed to larger audiences, stumbled thru his wedding vows before 350 guests who came from all parts of the country for the ceremony. Among them were his old friends, Lou Boudreau, manager of the Cleveland Indians, and Rollie Hemsley, a former teammate and now a catcher for the New York Yankees. Clarence Campbell, former outfielder with the Cleveland Indians and present athletic director for the army in Sioux City, Ia., was his best man.

Wedding Elaborate.

The elaborate wedding, replete with six bridesmaids and six ushers, appeared as if it would be postponed last week when the elder Feller was buried. It had been one of the last wishes of his father, however, that the wedding go on as planned. Bob, who had been on active sea duty and will return after a short honeymoon in New York this week, luckily had put into port in time for his father's funeral—and his wedding.

With unusual promptness, the bride, a tiny, wide-eyed trophy in ivory satin with orchids, the daughter of Martin P. Winther, inventor and president of the Dynamic corporation of Kenosha, Wis., walked down the aisle on her father's arm. She followed a bevy of girls in old-fashioned satin frocks and plumed headdresses.

Sister Is Maid of Honor.

Bob's wedding team consisted of Lt. Campbell, Lt. Rudolf Custer of the United States navy; Chief Specialists Glenn W. Cowart and Lyman Moulton, all of Great Lakes, and two cousins of the bride, Robert and Paul Lundskow of Kenosha. Cy Jones of the athletic department at Navy pier and one of the nation's outstanding collectors of baseball souvenirs acted as a "flunkey." Cy's reward was Bob's baseball uniform and the shoes he wore when he struck out 18 Detroit batters for an American league record.

Flee After Brief Kiss.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, which had been performed by Dr. H. B. Rhodes, pastor of the church, to the traditional accompaniment of "I Love You Truly" and "Because," and before an altar bedecked with huge baskets of white gladioli and snapdragons, the young couple virtually fled down the aisle. Bob had paused to fumble with the bride's veil for a brief kiss.

The young couple had met in January, 1940, when Virginia, "Dollie" to her family, friends and Bob, was a student at Rollins college. "I just happened to be walking on the campus one day when I met a friend of mine and Bob," she explained to reporters. "Bob was training with the team down there at the time. That was the luckiest walk I ever took."

Bob looked as if he might have enjoyed that stroll also as he towered over his tiny wife and posed pleasantly for pictures.

Reception for 400 Guests.

Following a reception for 400 guests at the bride's home last evening, the wedding couple planned to fly to New York for a honeymoon. Mrs. Feller will return to Waukegan immediately when Bob's leave is finished.

"Ours was a very modern courtship," the bride remarked blushingly. "We had such a short time to be together that we kept our dates by plane. Now it looks as if we will have to do the same thing again whenever Bob gets leave."

With friends and well wishers crowding around her in the vestibule of the church after the ceremony, Dollie was questioned whether she had been as nervous as her bridegroom.

"I don't think I was," she retorted blushingly. "I was shaking a little until I saw Bob at the altar and then everything was all right. Now I just feel like Mrs. Feller and an ardent baseball fan. I never was really interested in baseball until now."

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Late this afternoon, on the sixth of a mile track on the west lagoon in Garfield park, eight boys and girls will win Silver Skates championships. Their victories in the 26th meet sponsored by The Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., will climax Chicago's winter program of speed skating.

The first Silver Skates race—the name was suggested by the story of Hans Brinker—was held in 1917. Three hundred boys competed in this event. Now, more than a quarter of a century later, Silver Skates has become nationally known and the name has become widely associated with speed skating by its use in all sections of the nation.

Eight Age Classes.

Chicago's Silver Skates derbies now include eight age classes, five of them for boys. More than 3,000 enter the races which require two days to complete. Trials in four age classes for boys and girls under 16 years of age were held yesterday afternoon. The other preliminary events and the championships will be staged this afternoon with the first event starting at 1 o'clock.

Six states have sent skaters to the 26th derbies. Teams will represent Milwaukee, St. Louis, Cedar Rapids, Ia., Champaign-Urbana, and Cleveland, O. All of Chicago's independent clubs as well as a score of park and playground teams are entered. Suburban entries, including northern Indiana communities, complete the list.

Two Champions Race Today.

Two 1942 Silver Skates winners are entered in today's trials. They are Bernice Melewski of West Allis, Wis., girls' intermediate champion, and Chuck Edwards of the Northwest Skating club, boys' intermediate champion. They will compete in the senior races since the rules forbid a champion from defending his title in the class in which it was won.

Forty-nine boys and girls qualified in yesterday's races for the semifinals this afternoon in four Derbies. These are the boys' midget, juvenile, and junior classes, and the girls' junior class.

Fifty-seven races were held including 15 quarter-finals. Richard Johnson of the Barrett A. C., won his heat in the boys' midget class at 110 yards and came back to win his quarter-final race. His time of 13 1-10 seconds was the best in this bracket. Other quarter-final winners in the midget trials were Tom Laffey and John Schlimmer of Peirce playground, and Joe Prather of the Champaign-Urbana Skating club. Twelve boys under 12 remain in the battle for the midgets' silver skates.

Gross Has Best Juvenile Mark.

Fred Gross of Peirce playground had the best mark in the juvenile quarter-finals for boys 12 and 13 years old. He skated 220 yards in 23 7-10 seconds. Other quarter-final winners in this age class were Tom Tilden of Glen Ellyn A. A. A., Richard Bass of Peirce, and Jim Hayes of the C. Y. O. Tilden also won the sixth heat to qualify for the quarter-finals.

The best time recorded in the boys' junior quarter-finals was 40 7-10 seconds. The qualifying distance was 440 yards and the mark was made by John Klemundt of the C. Y. O. Don Laser, a team mate, who won the 1942 juvenile championship, also qualified by winning the third quarter-final race. Other winners in this bracket were Jack Peterson, 2221 Carmen avenue, and Byron Warnes of the Northwest Skating club.

Meet in Stadium Tonight.

The Hawks and Red Wings entrain for Chicago tonight where they will meet again towomrow night in the Stadium. The Hawks, who face a shakeup off their recent performances, will be better fortified for tomorrow's game with the return of Max Bentley, high scoring center of the Bentley brothers' forward line to their lineup. Max suffered a wrist and knee injury in a game with the Red Wings last Sunday, in Chicago and was unable to make the road trip. Dahlstrom returned to action only tonight, having hurried to Detroit on the plea of Johnny Gottselig, acting manager in place of Paul Thompson who is in Canada seeking new players to bolster the Chicagoans.

Thompson was ordered by Owner Frederic McLaughlin to "spare neither money nor men to get the team back in the running for the championship." Irked by the slump of the Blackhawks to fourth place in the league, Maj. McLaughlin told Thompson to "come up with the best to be had." Thompson's return to Chicago is expected to bring lineup changes affecting three or four men.

Delay Vikings, Slovaks Cup Soccer Game

BY OFFSIDE.

Chicago's soccer schedule continues to be upset, it was revealed yesterday, when it was found impossible to play the Viking-Slovak second round national cup match scheduled for today. The Vikings have balked at an order by Fred Netto, western national cup commissioner, to play the game in Sparta stadium instead of Winnemac park where it was originally listed. The Vikings have demanded an order from the New York commission, soccer's governing group, before placing the team on Sparta stadium field. This means a delay of at least a week in completing Chicago's second round games.

Contests today will send the Slovaks against Sparta in an exhibition contest at 2:30 p. m. Reserves of these teams will meet in an opening game starting at 1 o'clock. These teams are still in the natural cup round.

Sparta, which previously had lost two stars to the services in Jerry Nudera and Jerry Rezak, suffered another blow yesterday when it was learned David Rarity, outside half back, had been inducted into the army at Fort Sheridan. Sparta must plug these gaps with reserves today.

The Slovaks, who have been able to keep their team together for the last six weeks, will start the lineup which defeated the Swedish-Americans in a first round cup engagement against Sparta.

ARMY APPROVES RACE MEETING AT BAY MEADOWS

San Mateo, Cal., Jan. 16 (AP).—Bay Meadows race track received military approval today to conduct a spring meeting and William P. Kyne, general manager, said he would make formal application to the California racing board next week for dates. The military approval was given in a letter from the office of the commanding general of the western defense command, San Francisco.

Kyne said he would ask for a 52 day meeting, opening Feb. 20. He instructed Racing Secretary Charles Henry to visit Miami, Fla., and New Orleans to contact stable owners.

The track offers no transportation difficulties in that it is served by train, street cars, and buses. Old fashioned horse drawn tally-hos will be used to shuttle fans from the San Mateo station.

Purdue Names March 27 for Indoor Relays

Lafayette, Ind., Jan. 16 [Special].—Purdue university will sponsor an indoor relay meet here Saturday, March 27, with Hermon Phillips, Boilermaker track coach, serving as director, it was announced today by Athletic Director Guy Mackey.

Pointing out both the Butler and Illinois relays have been canceled, Mackey said, "our decision to sponsor an indoor relay meet was prompted by the fact there appears to be a need for track competition with many dual meet schedules necessarily curtailed and many coaches have expressed a desire for a relay meet at a centrally located point in the middle west that will minimize wartime transportation problems."

Phillips, who originated and developed the Butler relays during the time he was coach there, declared the newly inaugurated Purdue relays would consist of from 15 to 20 events with competition in both university and college sections. The details of the program will be announced shortly.

Michigan, Indiana, Notre Dame, Michigan State, and Miami of Ohio are among the teams which have indicated they will be interested in participating in the relays.

MANY PROBLEMS FACE BASEBALL STARS, EXPERTS

Players May Be Carrying Own Suit Rolls.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Many things are going to be different in major league baseball next spring and thru the season. What are the ball players going to do about their steaks? That's part of their life, the other part being base hits. Even good ball players will become scarce, but there'll be an ample supply of the mill run variety. They, too, like their steaks—if they can get 'em.

There may not be enough resin bags to last out the season and that's horrible even to contemplate. Then there'll be travel difficulties. The athletes may have to carry their own suit rolls emigrant style as was the custom before the game went highbrow. The fancy dressers may be forced to whittle their travel equipment down to an extra shirt. Depot redcaps already have thinned out along with the steaks. But the experts, the lads who write about the steaks and base hits, will still be with us, and that's something.

Writers Hardy Individuals.

However, the experts are going to find out, and quickly, that there have been some marked changes. "When do we eat" is not one of their battle cries. They can sit up all night, if necessary. They've had practice. Even no extra travel shirt would be nothing novel. But how are they going to expert in about another month with even a semblance of accuracy. A guy might expert a certain team into a pennant only to wake up the next morning and discover his sure thing had vanished into the army or navy.

Some of the experts already have moved themselves out on a limb that is rapidly being sawed away. They have decided as the result of being dumbfounded by the Cardinals in the last world series that the present world champions will go on repeating indefinitely at least so far as the National league pennant is concerned. Well, the Cardinals now are without Enos Slaughter and Terry Moore and Stan Musial may be gone by spring. Where does that leave the Cardinals? They have no outfield and shortly may have even less.

Yanks May Be Favored.

If anybody canvassed the experts at this moment on the possibilities in the American league race, a great percentage of opinions would favor the Yankees to repeat. What are the Yankees going to have by late April? Charley Ruffing, an old standby for the tough spots, has gone. Joe McCarthy is wondering about first base. And he's probably wondering just how long it will be before Joe DiMaggio turns up in a military uniform. Other Yanks also are sure to be missing from the box scores.

The cases of picking the Yanks and Cards to win are cited merely because they happen to be current title holders and, under normal conditions, could reasonably be counted on to get themselves into a repeat world series performance next fall. But other clubs will continue to be hit and the hitting is going to be hardest on the teams that thus far have experienced few or no important losses. Both the Yanks and the Cards were practically untouched in important spots until after the 1942 season.

White Sox Cleaned Out.

The White Sox, Athletics, and Washington were practically cleaned out of choice talent last season. Cleveland took a nose dive after Bob Feller enlisted. The Tigers weren't the same after Hank Greenberg went to work for Uncle Sam. The Cubs lost nobody of account last season. The Dodgers were equally fortunate. Boston's Red Sox were practically untouched. The Browns made some important contributions, but it didn't seem to hurt 'em. They leaped into third place with what remained.

What's going to make the difference this season and put the experts in a hazardous position? The Red Sox will miss Ted Williams and Johnny Pesky among others. The Dodgers may not have either Pete Reiser or Pewee Reese and Dixie Walker may remain in war work. These are pointed out because they are outstanding alterations, but there'll be others. So the result will be a general leveling off, particularly in the top clubs and by the time the season is well under way it is likely that some strange entries may be crowding in on the habitual topnotchers.

BOB FELLER'S WEDDING PARTY

Golden Gloves Boxers Face Physical Examiners Friday

Gloves Exams

PHYSICAL examinations for amateur boxers entered in the Chicago Golden Gloves sectional tournaments will be held on the following nights:

Jan. 22—Trafton's gymnasium.
Jan. 26—C. Y. O. gymnasium.
Jan. 29—Trafton's gymnasium.

Amateur boxers, who have already entered the 16th Golden Gloves sectional tournaments, will receive letters early this week to report for preliminary physical examinations Friday night. The boxers of the Catholic Youth organization will report Jan. 26 in the C. Y. O. gymnasium and the final examination night has been set for Trafton's gymnasium, 180 West Randolph street, on Jan. 29.

This completes the schedule of examinations which will be given by a staff of Golden Gloves physicians headed by Dr. William Rothman. In order to qualify for the Chicago sectionals, boxers are urged to send in their entry blanks this week. While no closing date for entries has been set, it is unlikely any boy can enter the tournaments after Jan. 27.

Exceptions for Some.

Exception will be made to the rule requiring preliminary examinations, however, for those boys whose work prevents them from reporting on one of the three nights named above. The hours of examination at the C. Y. O., 31 East Congress street, will be from 6:30 to 8 p. m. The examinations in Trafton's gymnasium will be held from 6 to 8 p. m.

Those boys who are working at night, or those who live outside the city limits and immediate suburbs, may apply for permission to enter the sectional tournaments without previous physical examinations. All contestants always have been examined thoroly on the night they fight and this special class will be given particular attention.

Boys 16 years of age and over are permitted to engage in amateur boxing by the Central association which sanctions the tournaments sponsored by THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE. While hundreds of boxers—200 of the C. Y. O. boys are in service—are gone, the number of contestants in the Chicago sectionals and in the Tournament of Champions will be increased by entries from the army and navy. Boxing is a part of physical training at all stations and posts and many service men will fight this year for a golden glove.

Sectionals in Chicago.

The Chicago sectional tournaments this year also will include amateur boxers from Joliet, Elgin, Hammond, and Gary, Ind., as well as from the suburbs of Cook county and Chicago.

Chicago's south side tournament will be held Feb. 1 and 2 in the St. Sabina gymnasium, 78th street and Racine avenue. The north side trials will be held in the Loyola university gymnasium Feb. 3 and 4. There are separate divisions for inexperienced boxers and for those who have had experience. Champions will be determined in both divisions at these tournaments.

The Chicago city tournament, in which the eight open division title holders from the north side meet the open champions from the south side, will be held Feb. 11 in the Armory, 16th street and Michigan avenue. The winners that night will represent Chicago in the Tournament of Champions in the Stadium Feb. 22, 23, and 24. The city novice champions also will be decided in the Armory.

Other Cities Go to Work.

Tournaments will be held next month in a score of cities to pick the teams to fight in Chicago in the Stadium. These centers include Cleveland, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, and Fort Worth, Tex., among others that have been associated with Golden Gloves for many years.

In the last 13 years three Chicago Golden Gloves champions have won world championships in professional boxing. They now are in the service of their country as are hundreds of other amateurs and professionals. By strange coincidence the three best known of the Chicago Golden Glovers, known because they have won world championships later, are in different branches of service. These men are:

Tony Zale, middleweight champion, United States navy.

Louis Won as Light-Heavy.

Louis won the 175 pound Golden Gloves title in 1934. He began fighting professionally in July, 1934, as a heavyweight and won the world's championship in Chicago in 1937 from Jimmy Braddock. He has not been defeated since and he now is stationed at Fort Riley, Kan.

Tony Zale now holds the world's middleweight championship. Tony was Golden Gloves champion of Gary, Ind., and was a member of the 1934 Chicago intercity team. Zale has enlisted in the United States navy and is stationed in Puerto Rico.

Barney Ross, first Golden Glover to win professional honors, won the Chicago amateur title in 1929 in the featherweight class. Ross defeated Tony Canzoneri for the world's lightweight championship and then took the welterweight title from Jimmy McLarnin. He retired after losing to Henry Armstrong. Barney enlisted in the marines and recently was promoted for bravery in the battle of Guadalcanal.

BREWERS OPEN DRILLS APRIL 6 AT WAUKESHA

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 16 (AP).—General Manager Rudy Schaffer said tonight the Milwaukee Brewers of the American association would open spring baseball training April 6 at Waukesha, Wis., 15 miles west of Milwaukee.

Schaffer said weather bureau records showed Waukesha's average temperature should be ideal for spring training. He said the club would use a municipal baseball field for its workouts and it was hoped exhibition games could be arranged with the university of Wisconsin.

The Brewers trained in Wisconsin the last time in 1918. They have worked out in Florida since 1936.

STUDEBAKERS TO MEET ZOLLNERS TODAY IN CICERO

The Studebaker Champions, beaten at home only once in five starts, play the second place Fort Wayne Zollners tonight in Cicero stadium in an effort to score their second league victory. They have lost twice.

The Chicago professionals won their first encounter, 55 to 47, but lost the next in Fort Wayne, 61 to 49, and the third in Milwaukee, 78 to 62. The Zollners also triumphed in an exhibition game in Hammond, 61 to 50.

The Fort Wayne offensive which has totaled 574 points in 11 games, is sparked by the 27 year old Hoosier ace, Bobby McDermott, a pro veteran of 10 years, who has scored 177 points this season.

Manager Danny Serafine says his starting lineup will include the newest Studebaker acquisition, Ted Strong, famed Negro defensive star. Mike Novak will begin at the other forward while Bernie Price will jump at center. Hilary Brown will combine at guard with either Johnny Orr, former C. Y. O. star, or Roosie Hudson.

A preliminary game between the Hyde Park Columbias and the Stude Bs is scheduled to begin at 7 p. m.

FANS CHEERING ENTERPRISE OF CHICAGO CLUBS

Praise Early Action on Spring Training.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Officials of the White Sox and the Cubs are elated over their emergency training camp plans involving a month's stay at French Lick Springs, and wisely have quit fretting about man power demands on their playing resources. As a result of the enterprise of the two Chicago rivals in swinging into action with the best available while other clubs were sitting around somewhat stunned by the problems of 1943, many Chicago fans are reported to be gurgling with optimism and some even are predicting that the two teams, both of which finished sixth last year, will show enough early foot to give themselves pennant contending ideas.

Southern California affords a joyous clime, but in the last few years all the semi-tropical atmosphere has not been conducive to concentration on preparations to play baseball. Last spring, for instance, about a third of the Cubs did not reside at Cub headquarters on Catalina Island and about half of the squad avoided the Los Angeles headquarters during the stay immediately after the return to the mainland. As a result, baseball conditioning in many instances was incidental to more pleasant social activities.

No Honeymoon Colony.

The Cub management was not altogether happy over the situation, but was said to have realized that a cracking down would have been looked upon as an invasion of private lives, with discontent that might have been worse than the scatter that prevailed. There will be no honeymoon colony at French Lick, private residences not being readily available in the town of 2,500 population.

The White Sox, in Pasadena, were not so much given to the honeymoon and private cottage epidemic, but with Hollywood lying just over a small hill, it was possible for the spirited lads to get their minds off baseball business thru relaxations other than reading and smoking.

It is not likely that any of the trainees will suffer from boredom, however. Despite its rather isolated position and its sylvan setting, the Hoosier spa provides varied entertainment especially designed to please persons there for improvement of their physical condition.

Will Live in Same Hotel.

The two teams will live in the same hotel and will use the same elaborate bathing equipment, but there will be no conflict in the Dykes system of physical culture and the Wilson course in muscle building.

The two managers have very different views about the way athletes should prepare for a baseball season. They can work out their two theories independently, for each will have his own baseball field. It is assumed that both emergency ball fields, tho not enclosed, will be in shape for baseball maneuvers. If not the Dykes system will suffer least, for Jimmy likes to keep his fellows away from baseball just as long as he possibly can. Any field will be adequate for the Indian club work and the batting of fungoes, tho it is not likely that Jimmy Austin, the California fungo hitter for the Sox, will be present at French Lick. However, both Coaches Mule Haas and Bing Miller can hit fungoes, as they proved after the Sox have left Austin in California.

Gallagher Has Ideas.

General Manager James Gallagher has said that he will encourage Wilson to do little exhibition playing with the Sox. To keep the whole thing informal, Gallagher has suggested an interchange of pitchers in whatever games are played in French Lick.

According to reservations recently made at the French Lick Springs hotel, the athletes will assemble from March 15 to March 21 and will stay in southern Indiana until almost time for the spring city series.

BOSTON BRAVES PICK CAMP NEAR NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 16 (AP).—The Boston Braves will hold their spring training at Choate school, Wallingford, Conn., John Quinn, secretary of the National league baseball club, announced tonight. Wallingford is about 15 miles north of New Haven.

Quinn said the team would go into training about March 22 and stay until about April 10.

In making the announcement after talking with the Rev. George C. St. John, headmaster of the school, Quinn said the team could hold its batting and infield practice in the school's 116 foot square cage.

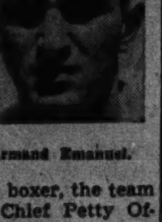
NEWS FROM ARMY AND NAVY POSTS

BY FRANK MASTRO.

Navy Pier.

CHIEF PETTY OFFICER Armand Emanuel, 1926 National A. A. U. heavyweight champion, who went on to win the Pacific coast professional title the following year, last week came from Norfolk, Va., to assist in the physical hardening program at this station. . . . Emanuel also will help coach the pier boxing representatives when they compete in the city Golden Gloves tournament which opens Feb. 1. . . . In addition to the former San Francisco boxer, the team will be handled by Chief Petty Officer Joe Walker, Chief Petty Officer Clyde Drury, and First Class Specialist Jack Gall. . . . Joe, who used to serve as director of boxing for the Catholic Youth organization of New York, is a brother of Mickey, ex-world welterweight and middleweight title holder. . . . Drury, who competed in athletics at Buena Vista college, formerly coached boxing at the University of Iowa. . . . Emanuel and Joe Walker will have something to talk about since Armand fought Mickey in San Francisco 14 years ago, but the likeable Californian may wish to forget the incident because Mickey knocked him out.



Armand Emanuel.

Lt. John Murphy, pier basketball coach, is directing the squad these days with his finger in a splint, the result of an injury he suffered recently while practicing with the varsity. Lt. Murphy's immediate assistants are Chief Petty Officer Bob Stewart, junior varsity coach, and Chief Petty Officer Al Addeo, director of an intramural program which has about 3,500 sailors and marines playing the cage game.

87th St. Naval Training School.

CHIEF PETTY OFFICER JOE NORVELL made his debut as boxing coach of this establishment by directing the school's boxers to a victory over Fort Custer in a Service Men's Amateur league match on Thursday. . . . Norvell, who is a native of Marshalltown, Ia., and competed in boxing, swimming, and football while a student at Parsons college in his home state, was enthused over his team's showing, including the hard, but losing fight Ed Estrado, 87th street lightweight, waged against Lou Drish, former Catholic Youth organization novice champion. . . . Some of Michigan's officials presided at the exciting show held in the fieldhouse at Fort Custer before a crowd of more than 2,000. . . . These men included Referee Neil Coleman, Kalamazoo; Judge Charles Baldwin, chairman of the Battle Creek Golden Gloves committee; Judge Pete Moser, city recreation director at Kalamazoo, and Timer C. De Mink, also of Kalamazoo. . . . Chief Petty Officer Dan Gregg has been sent to the station by Comm. Gene Tunney to assist in publicizing the sports program being conducted here.

Somewhere in New Zealand.

MARINE 1ST CLASS BOB FUREY, member of the Catholic Youth organization and Golden Gloves boxer, is a patient in a base hospital in this country being treated for wounds and shellshock suffered in Guadalcanal. . . . Bob, who is 21 years old and enlisted a year ago last Dec. 10, was married to Miss Vicki Triola at St. Philip's church in Chicago on May 6. [Bob's wife now is residing with his mother, Mrs. J. Kelly, at 662 Aldine avenue, Chicago.] . . . Two other members of the family also are in the service.

Glenview Air Station.

THE station's boxing representatives, who held Fort Custer to a draw, four bouts to four, two weeks ago, will return to action in a Service Men's Amateur league match against Navy pier at the pier Thursday. . . . The Glenview basketball color bearers also will be active, meeting Loyola university at Loyola on Wednesday.

Chanute Field.

A HEAD pin bowling tournament will open at this field tomorrow, participants being enlisted men of the post, Lt. John E. Laney of the special services department said yesterday. . . . The meet will permit contestants to roll 12 balls, each aimed at a full rack. . . . only one ball is rolled for each frame. . . . To score, one must drop the head pins; then the player is credited with this and as many other pins as are knocked down in the frame. . . . If the head pin is left standing there is no score for the frame. . . . A perfect score is 120. . . . Al Nowak of Detroit captained the team which won the first round title in intersquadron bowling league competition recently. . . . Frank Dziesupek, Jackson, Mich., topped all other individual bowlers when the first half of the intersquadron circuit tournament had ended with a 185 average. . . . Second was Harry Zolner, Ravena, N. Y., with 182, and third, Bernard Lundy, Galena, Kas., 181. . . . Fort Sheridan.

BOXING classes for members of the recruit training groups were started last week by Pvt. 1st Class Hank Melody, former Chicago boxer, as a contribution to the physical fitness program at this fort. . . . The post's boxing team, which has been forced to default matches in the Service Men's Amateur league competition to Camp Grant, Navy pier, 87th Street Naval Training school, and Fort Custer in the last month, will draw a bye this week, the respite giving it time to make replacements for members who have been transferred. . . . What is believed to be the first WAAC basketball team in the country is in the process of organization at Fort Sheridan. . . . The first contingent of WAACs to arrive at the camp a few weeks ago included Mildred Vosevich, Clara Walters, Marian Swan, and Anita Schilling. . . . Corp. Swan, recreational leader, has started plans for participation by her followers in hiking jaunts and swimming, bowling, and basketball competition. . . .

The Chicagoan accounted for eight points. . . . The Mixers and the Medics retained their position as first place share holders in the Loop basketball circuit by remaining unbeaten during the week.

Great Lakes.

Capt. Aldrich will suggest that a change be made in dates which may conflict with the Golden Gloves tournament next month. . . . Camp Grant's boxers, who won from Fort Sheridan last week by default to remain undefeated in league competition, will meet the Glenview air station in the Glenview gymnasium Thursday.

TENNIS OFFICIALS TENTATIVELY O.K. U. S. TOURNEY

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—The United States Lawn Tennis association decided today that its National Championship tournament should be held again this year if compatible with the war situation, but left the final decision to be made at a later date by a committee.

Apparently as the result of expressions from some sectional groups that the national tournaments should be discontinued for the duration, the executive committee moved that the annual meeting of the U. S. L. T. A. place the whole question of conducting the tourneys in the hands of a "special championship committee" headed by President Holcombe Ward.

Depends on Conditions.

This resolution, which was adopted without debate, said in part: "Resolved, it is the sense of this annual meeting that national tennis championships should be held if, at the time when arrangements necessary thereto must be made, it is the conviction of a special committee that such events or some of them are in the public interest and compatible with successful prosecution of the war."

On this basis the national men's and women's singles, doubles, and mixed doubles were awarded again to the West Side Tennis club at Forest Hills, New York, starting Sept. 1.

Other Tourneys Scheduled.

Other national tournaments were set as follows: Women's Indoor, Longwood Covered Courts, Chestnut Hill, Mass., March 22; Girls' Hard Court, California Tennis club, San Francisco, May 15; National Clay Court, site undetermined, June 14; National Intercollegiates, site to be determined by the N. C. A. A., June 21; National Interscholastics, Merion Cricket club, Haverford, Pa., July 5; National Junior and Boys, Culver, Ind., Aug. 2; Girls' Grass Court, Philadelphia Cricket club, Aug. 21.

The meeting followed a routine pattern except for a debate over the ranking of Francisco Segura and Gardnar Mulloy, both of Coral Gables, Fla. In the end the delegates voted to reverse the players' positions and list Mulloy third and Segura fourth in men's singles back of Fred Schroeder Jr. of Glendale, Cal., No. 1, and Frank Parker of Los Angeles, No. 2.

Pauline Betz No. 1.

All other rankings, including Pauline Betz as No. 1 among the women, were approved as announced by the committee several weeks ago altho Tom and Bob Falkenberg of Los Angeles were added to the list of class A men's players and Mary Jane Metcalf of Denver was added to Class A in women's singles.

President Ward, who was reelected along with all other officers, reported that 1942 had been a year of readjustment, but not one of disappointment and pointed to funds raised for war agencies and to "a healthier atmosphere which prevailed at tournaments as the result of plugging loopholes in amateur conduct in 1941."

Treasurer Russell B. Kingman reported that only $10.62 had been taken by the U. S. L. T. A. from its tournaments, other proceeds going to relief, and that as a result the association operated at a $13,901 loss during the year.

COMISKEY AND SAVOLD OPEN DRILLS FOR BOUTS

Face Worlds and Bolden, Respectively, in Stadium.

Lee Savold and Pat Comiskey, Paterson, N. J., heavyweights, yesterday opened workouts in the Ringside loop gymnasium for 10 round bouts against Nate Bolden and Clayton Worlds, respectively, in Chicago Stadium Friday. Both confined their activities to light loosening up exercises. They will start boxing preparations this afternoon.

Savold will spar with Worlds and Lindy Elliott, while Comiskey will box with Altus Allen, 1939 International Golden Gloves champion. Allen is paired with Lem Franklin, also a former International Golden Gloves title holder, in an additional match of 10 rounds on the card.

Daly Proves Optimistic.

Bill Daly, representative of Savold and Comiskey, believes Savold easily will beat Bolden, probably by a knockout, tho Nate never has been stopped during his six year professional campaign.

"Bolden hasn't got a chance," Daly said. "Savold is the seventh best heavyweight and surely a light heavyweight such as Bolden can't beat him."

Daly admits he knows little of Worlds, Comiskey's opponent. Worlds is a former city Golden Gloves champion. Since Comiskey, who is 22 years old, weighs 224 pounds, and is 6 feet 3½ inches tall, has engaged in only two contests in four months because of injuries suffered in an automobile accident, Manager Daly is worried. Pat scored a first round knockout over Joe [Big Boy] Carillo of Hartford, Conn., in New York on Jan. 11, but previously had been beaten by Alfred [Big Boy] Brown, recognized as duration champion by the Maryland athletic commission.

Worlds Wins Three Pro Fights.

Worlds, who stands 6 feet 4 inches and carries 194½ pounds, has participated in only five fights in the money ranks, winning three, boxing a draw, and losing one decision. In only his third appearance, however, he upset Altus Allen in 10 rounds on Sept. 21.

Bolden yesterday went three rounds each with Joe Maxin, Cleveland heavyweight, and Tito Taylor, south side welterweight. Before the workout he scaled 176 pounds, approximately 20 pounds less than carried by Savold.

Because the National Boxing association recently gave Savold that No. 7 rating [only Sergt. Joe Louis, Corp. Billy Conn, Pvt. Melio Bettina, Tami Mauriello, Turkey Thompson, and Pat Valentino being listed ahead of him], the 1937 Chicago intercity Golden Gloves victor has a hard task confronting him.

Savold Loses to Mauriello.

However, Savold has lost a few decisions since making his debut in Madison Square garden little more than two years ago against Conn, his setbacks including one at the hands of Jimmy Bivins on Nov. 27, also in the Garden. Savold stopped Lou Nova, Wallace Cross, Lou Brooks, and others, but he also was defeated by Mauriello.

Six round preliminary engagements will bring together Hank Postaway, Wyandotte, Mich., heavyweight, and Hubert Hood, 1942 Chicakoland Golden Gloves heavyweight titleholder, and Vince Calzaretto, Palos Park heavyweight, and Frank Greene, south side.

Maxin-Brown Bout Will Top Marigold Bill

Joe Maxin, 1940 Chicagoland Golden Gloves middleweight champion, and Clarence Brown, former Catholic Youth organization heavyweight title holder, will finish training this afternoon in the Ringside loop gymnasium for an eight round bout in Marigold Gardens tomorrow. Maxin will be appearing in this city for the first time since Oct. 5, when he defeated Hubert Hood, 1942 Chicagoland Golden Gloves heavyweight winner.

Supporting matches will include six round events involving Young Joe Wolcott, Cleveland middleweight, and Jack Hill of Bloomington, Ill., and Kippy Dumas, Detroit lightweight, and Alvin Gomez, south side, and four round encounters between Pete Boles, Detroit, and Young Kid Lewis, Chicago, and Bill Parsons, Danville, Ill., and Jackie Nichols, Gary.

Ed [Strangler] Lewis, the old heavyweight wrestling champion, will meet Ole Olson in White City tomorrow, and Hans Steinke in Rainbo Fronton Wednesday. . . . Pete Schu, Argo heavyweight, is paired with Billy Bartush in the windup bout of Promoter William Cepak's mat card in Cicero stadium Thursday. . . . The Veteran Boxers' Association of Illinois will conduct a meeting in its clubrooms at 73 West Randolph street Tuesday night.

SPOTTING THE PINS

BY C. H. BEUKEMA.

BOWLERS of the nation who are undertaking to aid war causes in one way and another thru the medium of the tenpin game, are to contribute to the Red Cross this week in the fourth of the five weekly campaigns sponsored by the Bowlers' Victory legion. They will do it in various ways in connection with league play or by taking up collections.

Returns are not complete on the first three week-long campaigns, but the American Bowling congress, which is serving as a clearing house, already has received $61,368 from the first USO drive, and $120,000 from the first Red Cross campaign. The third drive in which the purchase of war securities was stressed, brought a heavy response. For example, Spokane, Wash., bowlers bought $152,000 of bonds.

The fifth campaign, scheduled in February, will have the raising of additional USO funds as its objective.

Nick and Pete Butler Win Brothers' Tournament.

Schneider & Son, Danne Insurance, and South Shore bank were the only teams that could fashion shutouts in South Shore league play. Domestic Linen rolled high series, 2,934, after dropping the opening game to the Barretts. . . . Nick and Pete Butler shot 1,394, with handicap, to finish on top among 109 teams in Bensinger's annual brothers' two man tournament. They won $40 and medals. . . . National Bank of Hyde Park took Congress Linen by three pins in the first game, then added the last two easily in the Hyde Park Major. The winners' total, 2,922, was high for the circuit. . . . Schneiders and Meister each scored triples, but Atlas Prager won two and kept its lead by a comfortable margin in the Playmor Major. Pragers' 2,971 was high team score.

Chick Schroeder, Edelweiss captain, meets Joe Wilman, Budweiser captain in a five game exhibition at Dearborn-Jackson at 1:30 Tuesday afternoon. It's one of a weekly series featuring Wilman. . . . Purchasers' lead in the C. & N. W. 400 league was sharply pared when the Purchasers dropped two to the seventh place Fast Freights, and the runner-up Firemen piled in a 3,105 count to blank the Time Freights. . . . Clar-Wyn recreation, 1501 West Berwyn, is host tonight to the Sunday sweepstakes caravan. Sixteen teams make up the schedule as follows:

Commercial Anglers Need Assistance.

BY BOB BECKER.

Mr. Fisherman, if you are going to be on the home front this year and want to do another patriotic job, you'll fish for food whenever you can. What with meat, butter, and other food shortages in this country, there also will be a shortage of commercially caught fish, as this department pointed out some time ago, when it suggested that sportsmen anglers everywhere could help by bringing home every pound of fish caught and using it for food in the home.

The way it looks now, commercially caught fish which used to be purchased at markets not only are going to be scarcer, but higher priced. The professional fishermen along our coasts obviously haven't been able to reach some of their best fishing grounds nor bring in the catches they used to get. So hook and line fishermen must now come to bat to do what they can.

Hunters Do Their Share.

Last fall this department urged every hunter to waste not a single pound of wild game meat [including ducks, geese, quail, venison, rabbits, and other game] which sportsmen kill each fall. The complete program of wild game meat utilization proposed was endorsed by the secretary of agriculture as a conservation measure that would save fresh meat. It's estimated that hunters last year added about 135,000,000 pounds of meat to the nation's dwindling supply by using their shotguns and rifles in the game fields and marshes. Authorities figure that the value of the ducks and geese alone that were served in homes was around $5,000,000.

Now it looks as if it were up to the fishermen who still are on the home front to use their tackle in a patriotic manner during the coming season. Let's make it a year of fishing for food as well as for the relaxation and rest that this popular sport affords.

Will Be Fewer Fishermen.

There will be fewer fishermen able to reach lakes and rivers this year than in former years. But those who can get a day or two away from arduous war jobs and spend that time fishing on lakes and streams will be urged to fish not only to get the thrill of a hook and line scrap with some member of the finny tribe, but also to get food, with due observance to the bag limits.

Some idea of how many millions of pounds of fish may be served in homes this coming season thru the efforts of fresh water anglers can be obtained by a glance at these figures: There are roughly 1,858,000 licensed fishermen in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota. If this great army of anglers averages only 10 pounds of fish per season, a ridiculously low figure considering the length of the season and the number of expert fishermen in this area, it would mean more than 18,000,000 pounds of edible, nourishing fish added to our food supplies right here in the middle west.

Michigan Has Creel Census.

Actually, a closer estimate of the amount of fish that may be taken from the lakes and streams of these four midwestern states undoubtedly would fall between 35,000,000 and 50,000,000 pounds, for in Michigan alone, anglers caught 16,000,000 pounds of sport fish last season. Michigan has a creel census so it is able to determine just how much luck fishermen have with their tackle.

If hook and line anglers can bring home at least 35,000,000 pounds of crappies, bluegills, bass, muskies and other sport fish this summer, eat what they need in the home and share the surplus of the catch with neighbors, this source of nourishing food would be valued at about $7,000,000.

TRICKS TO SAVE GAS BACKFIRE ON CAR OWNERS

BY HAL FOUST.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16.—Nationwide gasoline rationing, designed to conserve rubber, is fulfilling this function, but it also is foreshortening the lives of many automobiles, according to reports received here from all parts of the country. The undesirable results from the motor fuel curtailment are attributed mainly to misguided efforts of owners to stretch the mileage from their coupons.

Virtual abandonment—or maybe it's better described as careless temporary storage—is the most common offense. Many owners, especially in the 17 Atlantic seaboard states, have left their cars at curbs to await an easement of driving restrictions. A regional petroleum shortage, which is likely to continue thru the winter, has prompted a ban on all unnecessary driving, regardless of ration books, in these eastern states.

Weather Affects Exterior.

The adverse effect of weather on the exterior of an automobile is apparent. Just as real is deterioration of inactive mechanical parts when they are not properly prepared for storage. Proper protection in storage requires a special lubrication job to guard against interior rust.

In the midwest, according to Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club, the most common offense against the longevity of automobiles is for owners to adjust their carburetors or extremely lean gasoline mixtures, increasing the miles per gallon but decreasing the miles per motor vehicle life.

Reduces Power.

"This illy advised trick," said Hayes, "reduces engine power. This necessitates more frequent gear shifting. The clutch is overworked.

"The excessively thin mixture produces a hotter combustion. Valves are exposed to scorching.

"Stalling becomes frequent. The battery and starter are overworked.

"It becomes necessary to use the choke more than would be done with a normal carburetor adjustment. Crankcase oil is diluted with fuel. Lubrication is faulted.

"The thin mixture will increase the 'ping,' the spark knock, in accelerating or pulling. Some motorists have tried to compensate for this annoyance by retarding their ignition timing. This increases gasoline consumption and also adds to motor wear."

Coasting Wears Brakes.

In the far west, the worst gas saving trick, according to reports received here, consists of coasting down the long grades peculiar to that section of the country. This causes excessive wear on the brakes. It eliminates the braking from engine compression when the gas throttle is closed with the gears engaged and the car in motion. The practice is dangerous in mountains and is prohibited by statute in some states.

The goofiest gas saving trick reported to date consists of disconnecting some of the spark plugs so that only a fraction of the cylinders, enough to pull the car, are burning gasoline. Without further adjustment, the idle cylinders, dragging on the engine, receive fuel but don't burn it. Regardless of adjustments, there's a thrust on bearings, crankshaft and other engine parts foreign to the design of the motor.

Save by Careful Driving.

"Careful driving and good maintenance are the best measures for gasoline economy, and tire and automobile economy," said the Chicago Motor Club president. "Avoid fast stops, starts, and turns. Take it easy in traffic.

"On the mechanical side, the car should be tested for any actual gasoline leak, for weak battery, worn or dirty spark plugs or distributor points. Check brake adjustments and wheel alignments. Use the tire guage frequently. Follow factory recommendations for carburetor mixtures and for lubricants.

"Let's try to keep all of our automobiles functioning thru the war. The rubber shortage may be eased next year. America needs motor transportation to sustain civilian economy thru the war."

MERE MENTION OF LIMIT ON CARS DRAWS PROTESTS

BY HAL FOUST.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16.—William M. Jeffers, rubber conservation director, on a Christmas holiday trip to his Omaha, Neb., home, commented to a reporter that it might become necessary to limit automobile ownership to one car per family. He hasn't said any more on the subject, possibly because of a storm which followed publication of his remark.

The idea of taking the second automobile from the two car family is not new in Washington, and it was learned today that it still is receiving consideration in various forms. Officials indicated, however, that this measure is not likely to be invoked unless the rubber shortage becomes as desperate this fall as Jeffers has said it is likely to become if he does not get the priorities he is seeking for construction of synthetic rubber plants.

Cars Would Deteriorate.

As originally proposed last summer by advisors to Transportation Director Joseph B. Eastman, all but one car per family would be immobilized as part of the government's limit on tire ownership. The discarded, or at least postponed, idea was that tire ownership would be limited to five casings per family rather than five per vehicle.

An estimated 2 million vehicles are involved. The scheme would have given the government approximately 10 million usable tires for redistribution thru ration channels. But the fly in the ointment was the problem of what to do with 2 million tireless automobiles.

Without proper maintenance, 2 million immobilized motor cars would deteriorate. America needs to prolong, not to shorten, the life of its vehicles. Production of new automobiles was halted a year ago. There were advocates in the government bureaus who favored requisitioning the 2 million automobiles and reselling them to munition workers, farmers, doctors, policemen and taxicab companies.

Ration Cards by Families.

A scheme now receiving attention would use the gasoline ration as a means to bring about what was too difficult by direct means. A family with more than one car would receive a total number of coupons in relation to total necessary driving and without regard to the number of cars in the family. At present, at least an A book is issued for every automobile.

A family with two cars and only one A book for both would store or sell one automobile. If it were stored it would contribute nothing toward community transportation. If sold to a dealer its potential transportation would not be utilized by society until it was resold and returned to operation.

Also there's a question whether 2 million automobiles could be absorbed by the used car market. Ray Chamberlain, executive vice president of the National Automobile Dealers' association, said there are less than a million used cars in dealer hands. He said that inventories shrunk after new cars were rationed until gasoline rationing became nation-wide.

Says Rationing Will Do It.

"I haven't been able to get a clear picture of the current national used car market because conditions are changing so rapidly and vary so widely in different regions," said Chamberlain. "Whatever the government decides to do, I'm convinced that gasoline rationing is the effective and convenient implement without any rationing of used cars.

"Restrictions on a car owner's fuel supply induce him to sell. Allowances for fuel are an inducement for buying. By controling the gasoline the government can adjust the distribution of car ownership in whatever way becomes necessary."

Must Replace Older Cars.

The theory of redistributing ownership was described by Charles L. Dearing of the Brookings institute last summer in a study published immediately before he became an Eastman consultant. His study pointed out that ownership of the oldest automobiles, those first to wear out, was concentrated in the hands of farmers and laborers who needed machines for essential transportation.

To date there has been little evidence that the redistribution of car ownership requires an artificial stimulant to assume serviceable vehicles for essential driving. Enough used machines are on the market available for purchase, under ceiling prices, by any one with a gas ration book who makes the purchase worth the price. At present moderate operation of a second car in a two car family is recognized by the government as equitable compensation for maintenance and storage pending any time its sale becomes desirable to stock the used car market. That's the consensus of thinking in the several offices concerned, none talking for quotation.

VOICE OF TRAFFIC

KIND HEARTED THUG?

Chicago, Dec. 27.—I wish to thank the kind-hearted person who in the evening of Christmas day, the day of joy and good will and peace on earth, punctured the left front tire of my car parked on the empty lot in the 400 north block between Drake and St. Louis streets.

I wish to thank him because he was so kind as to puncture only one tire with an ice pick, which was easily repaired. This way it took me only about an hour in the mushy ice and mud to put on my spare, and be on my way home. If he had taken a butcher knife and cut all four tires, as it happened to my brother-in-law one night, I would have had some trouble on my hands.

The more I think of it, the more excuses I find for that "gentleman" who did it. I was a stranger on that lot, and maybe I took up his accustomed parking space. I have only an A card, but maybe he thought I was an accursed C card owner, and that he did his patriotic duty in puncturing my tire. May he rest in peace and excuse my intrusion.—560-236 Ill. 1942.

DOCTORS MUST RELAX.

Joliet, Ill., Jan. 6.—Please do not be too critical if you see your doctor's car parked in front of the movie or legitimate theaters. He works hard and must have a chance to relax once in a while.

He has an A card the same as you, and does not use his D card except for professional calls. DOCTOR'S WIFE.

FIRE HAZARD?

Chicago, Jan. 6.—Pontiac 21-215 is permanently parked on North La Salle east side between Lake and Randolph. Why? Paper sign in car says "Fire Official." Law says: "No Parking." Why are fire officials privileged to break laws? RAMOND H. HEALEY, 193 North La Salle.

NEWS AND VIEWS

This is another story of how an automobile company which formerly supplied the needs of America for peace time passenger cars and trucks has gone far outside its normal routine to help win the war. The company is the Dodge division of the Chrysler corporation, and the unique work it is doing is the construction of Sperry gyro-compasses.

The device is one of the most delicate and intricate instruments used in the war. It's a device in which certain parts have tolerances that are virtually "nothing" and in which machining must be exact to the hundredth of an inch.

The gyro-compass came into general use for ships after the development of a device by the united nations to combat axis magnetic mines, according to F. J. Lamborn, Dodge vice president in charge of manufacturing. The instrument used to combat the mines so affected the operation of magnetic compasses, with which sailors had navigated for many years, they could no longer be relied upon. So the gyro-compass came into use.

"Intricate as is the construction of the Dodge built gyro-compass, it is first cousin to the simple red and green top which every child owns at some time or another," Lamborn said. "Every one knows that when a gyro-top is spun it may wobble momentarily, but will then stand straight on end. As it is pushed over it pushes right back. It will 'jump' or 'walk' a string, but it still stands straight up.

"Years ago some one discovered that if a top were built with both ends of its axis locked in a frame it would continue to spin in any direction it was started—horizontally, vertically, or at an angle. If this gyroscope, as the new top was called, were balanced in a north and south direction, and started spinning, it would keep on pointing north and south. It was this discovery that resulted in making a spinning top act as a compass, always pointing north and south."

Lamborn added that it is obvious that the present gyro-compass is not as simple as a top. The part that spins, for example, a part that is called the rotor, weighs about 50 pounds. The total unit weighs nearly 600 pounds.

The ability of the Dodge organization testifies to the versatility of the automobile craftsman, for most of the workers engaged in constructing the device formerly helped to assemble automobiles. But building an automobile and constructing a gyro-compass are entirely two different kinds of work. In one part of the gyro assembly a strand of 18 separate wires—each of which is about the thickness of a hair—is used. After assembly these strands of wire cannot be touched, Lamborn said, because the perspiration or moisture from a single finger might cause rust affecting the weight of the entire strand. After manufacture, however, the strands are protected so salt air, moisture or other factors cannot affect them.

MEDIATORS FAIL TO SETTLE RAIL WAGES DISPUTE

Head of Board Says Strike Is Unlikely.

Efforts of the national mediation board to mediate the dispute between the railroads and 15 nonoperating unions over the unions' demand for wage increases and the closed shop failed yesterday. However, there is little likelihood of a strike developing from the dispute. Unions involved include clerks, machinists, electricians, maintenance of way workers, signal men, and others.

George A. Cook, chairman of the national mediation board, said his board had been unable to bring about a settlement. He explained that there is little chance for a strike because railroad labor has pledged the President that there will be no strikes during the war provided the government sets up adequate machinery for handling disputes. This the government has done.

Seek 20 Cents an Hour Increase.

The unions, with a membership of about 900,000, had requested a wage increase of 20 cents an hour, with a minimum wage of 70 cents an hour, and the closed shop. The railroads estimated the increase would cost them about 450 million dollars anually.

The mediation proceedings started here Jan. 7, with Cook meeting in the mornings with the unions at the Morrison hotel and the railroads conferring with union officials in the afternoons at the Union Station office building.

Cook's effort to have the dispute arbitrated also failed. All the railroads refused to arbitrate the closed shop demand on the ground that a compulsory union membership agreement is forbidden by the railway labor act.

The western and southeastern railroads were agreeable to arbitrating the wage demands "subject to the terms of the anti-inflation act enacted by congress and to the President's executive order providing for the stabilization of the national economy." The eastern roads refused to arbitrate the wage demand.

Expect to Hold Open Hearings.

The next step in the dispute is expected to be handled thru the national railway labor panel, of which Dr. William M. Leiserson is chairman. It is expected that the panel will hold open hearings on the dispute, probably in Chicago.

Commenting on the unions' pledge to proceed thru the machinery for handling labor disputes set up by the government, Cook said:

"This would mean that there will be no necessity for taking a strike vote or fixing a date to strike. Consequently, an orderly and peaceful procedure is provided and undoubtedly will be followed, and there need be no concern of any threat to interrupt interstate commerce."

Explain Refusal to Arbitrate.

The railroads in explaining their refusal to arbitrate the closed shop said that the closed shop on railroads is "in contravention of the express provision of the railway labor act which states 'it shall be unlawful for any carrier to interfere in any way with the organization of its employés . . . or to influence or coerce employés in an effort to induce them to join or remain or not to join or remain members of any labor organization'."

In the mediation proceedings D. P. Loomis was chairman of the committee for the western roads, H. A. Enochs for the eastern roads, and J. B. Parrish for the southeastern roads. B. M. Jewell, head of the railway employés division, American Federation of Labor, was chairman of the unions' committee.

Take Referendum on Pay Increase.

Meantime, officials of the Big Five operating brotherhoods—engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, and switchmen—have been taking a referendum among their members on a request for a wage increase of 30 per cent, or a minimum increase of $3 a day.

Formal notice of the wage demand is expected to be served on the railroads about Jan. 25, and it is expected that joint conferences between the unions and the roads will be started in the middle of March.

During last week 122 war contracts were awarded 66 concerns in the Chicago area, Leverett S. Lyon, chief executive officer of the Chicago Association of Commerce, announced yesterday. Since the beginning of war production 1,846 companies in the area have received 9,139 government contracts amounting to $1,924,872,000, Lyon said.

Report Miners May Return to Pits Tomorrow

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Jan. 16 (AP).—Indications that eastern Pennsylvania's striking anthracite coal miners may return to their jobs Monday in compliance with a war labor board order were reported increasing tonight.

[Wilkes-Barre dispatches last night said there had been no spread of the strike altho earlier reports had said 6,100 more miners were out because of disagreement as to overtime pay rates for working Saturday. The late dispatches said the 6,100 "took their usual Saturday holiday."]

From several locals of the United Mine Workers of America in the Wilkes-Barre and Scranton areas, where some 17,000 miners started an unauthorized walkout Dec. 30 in protest against a union dues increase of 50 cents a month, came unofficial expressions that the workers will follow the WLB directive under a "watch and wait" policy.

Worker Demands Multiply.

Coupled with the protest against the dues increase, which was adopted at its UMWA convention in Cincinnati last October, are two side issues—demands for a $2 daily wage increase and time and a half pay for working a sixth day each week. The present working agreement calls for a five day, 35 hour week.

The miners, according to reports tonight, may adopt a back to work policy tomorrow after hearing reports from representatives who attended the WLB meeting in Washington.

The war labor board, in an action regarded as a clear cut victory for John L. Lewis, fighting a revolt against his leadership of the UMW, told the miners to go back to work immediately and submit their grievances to processes outlined in their contract with the operators.

Loss 450,000 Tons a Week.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—Estimating that the hard coal strike was costing the country 450,000 tons of fuel per week, Harold L. Ickes, solid fuels coördinator, announced today plans to use substitutes and other measures to tide over the period of the work stoppage.

Ickes said anthracite production in the week ended Jan. 9 amounted to 888,000 tons, and was 450,000 tons less than could have been expected if all the mines were operating. He said eastern bituminous coal producers have agreed to increase shipments into the east coast states.

Delay Canadian Meeting.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 16 [Special].—Because of the inability of some delegates to get here on time, the meeting of union officials and representatives of plant managements with members of the federal cabinet to try to settle the strike in the Canadian steel plants was adjourned until Monday.

ARMOUR GROUP MAPS PROGRAM FOR ARGENTINA

Ways of Developing Resources Urged.

After nearly a year of research travels, a Chicago scientific party has returned from the jungles, deserts, mountains, cities and Patagonian plains of Argentina with a series of recommendations for development of the resources and industries of that nation.

Dr. Francis W. Godwin.

The field party consisted of three scientists headed by Dr. Francis W. Godwin, assistant director of the Armour Research Foundation. The foundation was commissioned by the Argentine government to make the sruvey, and was the first time that such a study of Argentina had been sponsored by the government. Results of the study were disclosed yesterday by Dr. Godwin.

Action Already Taken.

Steps to adopt some of the suggestions already have been taken, Dr. Godwin said, and asserted that the program is expected to facilitate noncompetitive trade between Argentina and the United States.

The foundation made the following recommendations, among others:

Jute—Develop a larger jute industry on an efficient, mechanically operated basis to compete with India. The climate in the jungles near the Paraguayan and Brazilian borders was found excellent for the crop, which could find a market in the United States. Machines are needed to replace the hand flaying methods now used to separate the fiber from the woody and resinous materials.

Increase Leather Output.

Leather—Take steps to increase output of good grade leathers. Much of the leather tanned in Argentina is of low grade because it is damaged by scratches on the live animals, the skins of which are extensively torn by thorns on plants and by barbed wire. The foundation suggested a drive to eliminate the thorny plants, and also to eliminate ticks, which likewise damage the hides.

Tanning—Remove the tariffs which prevent importation of certain tanning chemicals that cannot economically be used in Argentina because of high cost. These chemicals are needed to help improve the quality of the leather tanned in Argentina, which relies on the juice of the quebracho tree as a tanning agent.

Dairy Products—Develop by-products, such as casein for plastics, dried milk, lactic acid, and vitamin concentrates, and improve the quality of butter and cheese to make them suitable for the export market.

Urges Fermentation Industries.

Grain—Establish more fermentation industries to make solvents from grain, such as ethyl, a fuel blending agent, and butyl, for use in making chemicals. This would turn grain surpluses into products now imported.

Chemicals—Begin producing in Argentina, from native materials, at least 44 chemicals that are imported and that require 80,000 tons of shipping space a year. Argentina has large deposits of salt, potassium and other minerals, including barytes, a mineral from which is made the base for barium salts, and fluorides, the base for insecticides. Insecticides are highly important in agricultural and stock raising Argentina, and much arsenic is imported.

Coal—Cease making charcoal by crude methods now widely used and employ efficient by-product ovens that will yield also wood distillation by-products such as pitch and wood alcohol [methanol] for making formaldehyde for plastics.

Vegetable Oils—Encourage production of large amounts of sunflower seed oil, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, olive oil, and develop the newer tung oil and soy bean oil crops, but balance the output of such oils to avoid accumulation of burdensome surpluses.

Special Group Selection of 5 Issues Yielding from 8% to 14%

CURRENT UNITED OPINION Bulletin analyzes the advantages of purchasing selected Railroad Bonds selling at 35% to 50% of par value and yielding from 8% to 14%. Interest on the 5 Bonds selected by our Staff was earned 2½ times over in 1942.

Railroads Buying Their Own Bonds

An important new Bullish feature in the outlook for these issues is the large purchases of bonds selling below par by the Railroads themselves. This makes the 5 issues selected by our Staff particularly attractive from a price standpoint.

U. S. War Bills Just Look Big, English Argue

BY LARRY RUE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Jan. 16.—President Roosevelt's proposed budget set a complicated problem before London financial writers of how to explain the fact that the United States, with a population slightly less than three times that of Great Britain and an estimated national income approximately four times as large, can afford to spend five times as much on the war.

The most popular explanation advanced is the argument that the official exchange rate of about $4 to the pound sterling heavily understates British values and that $6 to the pound would be a more accurate measure of relative war expenditures.

On this basis, Oscar Hobson contended, United States war spending during the coming fiscal year would be only three times Britain's war outlay for the same period.

Hobson, a member of the court of governors of the London School of Economics, writes a column in the News Chronicle.

U. S. Costs Much Higher.

In support of the argument that American efforts are overstated in the present dollar-sterling rate, Hobson said:

"It is known, for example, that the cost of certain manufactured war products in America is, in dollars, much higher than their cost here in pounds sterling."

Hobson figured United States wages double those paid Britons doing comparable work, which would make the rate "nearer $8 to the pound than $4, while American soldiers' pay, notoriously much higher than the pay of British soldiers . . . gives an equivalent rate of exchange, say, of 10 or 11 dollars to the pound."

In attempting to show that the disparity in contributions of the two countries is not as wide as might appear from budget figures, Hobson made no mention of the facts that much of the American war output is shipped here under lend-lease arrangements, that Britain is importing more from the United States than she exports, and that every pound's worth Britain does buy costs only $4, not $6.

OFFER MACHINES IN U. S.

British manufacturers of machinery are continuing to advertise their products extensively in foreign countries despite war regulations which prohibit machinery export for civilian industry use. A magazine, Machinery Lloyd, crammed with British machinery advertisments and containing some technical articles, is being received by business men in Chicago and elsewhere.

The magazine apparently also is intended for the South American market. Many of its advertisments and articles are in Spanish as well as English.

A British spokesman in Chicago said yesterday that the advertisments could not be considered offers to sell now, and could be regarded only as good will advertising.

RADICAL CHANGES FOR INDUSTRIAL DESIGN FORECAST

A new concept of production practices involving radical changes in design of industrial buildings in peace time will be a result of developments in war plant construction, John Goodridge, president of the Illinois Brick company, predicted yesterday.

He asserted that new type construction has made present civilian plant design virtually obsolete. The result, he said, will be that many manufacturers in peace time will be compelled to rebuild their plants "from the walls in and the roof down," or move into a new factory.

"With the coming of peace," he said, "a whole new generation of war made production experts will turn their talents to manufacturing for civilian needs. This will create a bitter competitive state in which the survivors will be those who can succeed in converting most quickly and thoroly.

LONDON, Jan. 16 (AP).—The Board of Trade announced today its index of British commodity prices showed a 3½ per cent increase during 1942 compared with an advance of 5 per cent during 1941.

POLICING MEAT TRADE TERMED IMPOSSIBLE JOB

Types of Violation Are Many.

BY ARNOLD ERICKSON.

Office of price administration "police" who are moving in against illegal trade in meat face an "almost impossible" task, authorities on distribution declared yesterday. They recalled that the government failed to stop the sale of a big tonnage of pork to consumers from 1933 to 1936 in violation of the hog processing tax. Bootleggers now have the added advantage of a civilian meat shortage.

The fight against illegal meat traffic is considered more complex than the one against liquor in prohibition days. Altho OPA undoubtedly will plug some wide leaks and make examples of organized price violators, extensive unorganized bootlegging and price violations will continue as long as meat is rationed in abnormally low quantity thru inspected trade channels, observers contended.

Difficult to Obtain Proof.

Coöperation of some retail butcher shops, live stock buyers at small markets and auction barns, farmers, truck drivers, and former meat peddlers, makes it difficult to obtain proof for conviction, it was alleged.

Meat authorities said the complexity of the problem lies in the many methods by which federal allocation orders and price laws are being violated. The "invisible" racket by which the ceilings are pierced by some wholesalers is said to be practiced extensively. Here is how it works: A retailer obtains 175 pounds, but pays for 200. He is forced to crack his own ceilings or go broke.

Up grading of meat, stopped among packers some time ago by the government, is common among retailers faced with ceilings, small profit margins, and low volume, it is said. Thru this practice some butchers charge top prices for lower grade meat. "Bonuses" paid by some retailers to meat peddlers cover up some bootlegging, and the extra charge is passed on to the consumers.

One butcher told of buying a whole dressed beef carcass from "a stranger" at $20 to $25, more than an inspected packer would charge. Under OPA restrictions, he could not get that much beef at one time from a packer. He averted a loss by raising his prices and gave his customers all the beef they wanted for a time.

Some peddlers are canvassing retail stores offering to deliver meat at prices usually about 5 cents above wholesale ceilings.

Hundreds of smaller violations are made innocently, while some are protected by technical points in the complex laws which have not yet been put to a test in court.

A Chicago business man who owns a farm brought in 400 pounds of meat recently and gave some of it to friends and neighbors. He did not charge for it so did not break the law, but he did contribute to the defeat of the civilian allocation orders.

DETROIT SUITS FILED

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 16 [Special].—The office of price administration today filed its first "treble damage" suit here against two wholesale meat dealers, asking damages totaling $45,804.

Priorities Troubles Place New Musical Instrument on Market

A new, priorities inspired musical instrument, nearly all wood, has appeared. It is called the bandello and, altho designed to be used by school children for basic music education purposes, it is said to be suitable for any one who likes to strum.

Any tired business man who would like to let his war and priorities trouble float away on the harplike music of the bandello while he sits in an easy chair of an evening can learn to play a tune on the instrument in 10 minutes—just like that—its sponsors declared yesterday.

Combines Three Principles.

The bandello, a stringed instrument, is a combination of three constructional principles that are centuries old—lute tuning, banjo body construction except for a wooden top, and the fretted keyboard. The shell is of plywood and its top is of spruce wood. The neck is like a mandolin's, and the instrument is tuned like the lute of Queen Elizabeth's day.

If the strings are plucked near the bridge the tone is somewhat like that of a banjo, but more sustained or lingering. When the strings are played farther from the bridge the tone is sweet like that of an Irish harp.

No Patents Sought.

The bandello was designed to meet a need for an easy to play, low price instrument made of noncritical material to replace harmonicas and other instruments no longer manufactured in volume because they require use of scarce metals.

The bandello was designed by Dr. W. Otto Miessner, head of the music department of the University of Kansas, in collaboration with Clarke Fortner, a Chicagoan who heads the music division of a local company which has undertaken to market the instrument. Another Chicago company has received a contract to make it.

The designers said they made no attempt to patent the instrument and will receive no royalties or other payments from it.

Insull Holders May Receive Small Payment

Funds are available for a small final distribution to owners of debentures issued by Insull Utility Investments, Inc., and serial gold notes issued by Corporation Securities Company of Chicago, thru termination of the long equity proceedings involving these companies.

Depending on the amounts allowed in final legal fees and expenses, the distribution will approximate $1 for each $1,000 principal amount of securities owned, it was indicated in reports filed with Federal District Judge Michael L. Igoe yesterday by Garfield Charles, special master in chancery in both cases. Ten days are allowed for the filing of objections.

When the distribution is made, Insull Utility security holders will have exhausted all legal means for recovery on their investments, the bankruptcy case already being closed, the report said.

One Avenue Remains Open.

Corporation Securities note holders still have one avenue of recovery open—a distribution of whatever is realized thru prosecution of a 75 million dollar suit in bankruptcy scheduled for trial this spring. This is the suit of Sam Howard, trustee, charging mismanagement and naming several Corporation Securities directors.

The Charles reports gave an accounting of funds paid into the two estates by Chicago and New York banks in settlement of litigation arising from loans made to the utility holding companies and the pledge of securities as loan collateral.

The banks contributed $3,435,088 to the Insull Utility estate and, $3,331,982 had been disbursed by Dec. 31, deadline set by court for the filing of claims. Debenture holders received $2,502,068, and $829,914 was paid in legal fees and expenses.

$83.53 Per $1,000 Paid.

Payments made since the start of this year to debenture owners who had filed their claims on time reduced to $99,997 the amount remaining for appropriation.

Two payments in the equity case gave I. U. I. debenture holders $44.50 per $1,000 certificate, and the bankruptcy case produced $39.03, or a total of $83.53.

The banks paid $1,200,000 into the Corporation Securities equity estate, and $1,150,686 had been distributed by Dec. 31, $896,515 going to serial note holders and the rest to attorneys, committee members, accountants, the special master and others. Payments since Dec. 31 to note holders who had their claims filed on time reduced the amount to be appropriated to $47,936.

Corporation Securities note holders have realized $47.50 in equity case returns on each $1,000 of notes, and will share in the distribution of the remaining fund and whatever is realized thru the bankruptcy case.

OPA SETS FLAT MILK PRICE CEILINGS IN SIX STATES TO TEST PLAN

Dallas, Tex., Jan. 16 (AP).—The OPA today set flat price ceilings on wholesale and retail milk sales in six southwestern states—based on production costs—and then sat back to see how this completely new plan worked. If successful, it may be given a nationwide trial.

Previously milk price ceilings have been based on the highest prices charged by individual dealers in March, 1942. Regional Director Max McCullough said these ceilings produced many inequalities. Milk would flow where the money was, leaving cities with a low ceiling facing a possible shortage. Manufacturing plants, producing butter, cheese, and condensed and evaporated milk, had an advantage since they were not subject to price regulation prior to last October.

The OPA established two zones, with each zone having three classes, in the six state area of Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Kansas. A different set of prices has been established for each class, but nowhere can milk be retailed for more than 15 cents a quart, and in some places a quart will cost only 12 cents.

CARPET DIVISION MOVED TO MART BY CARSON PIRIE

The floor covering division of Carson Pirie Scott & Co., wholesale, which formerly occupied the third floor of the Carson wholesale building, 366 Adams street, now under lease to the government, has been moved to the Merchandise Mart, Frederick H. Scott, president, announced yesterday.

The lease provides for immediate occupancy of the space on the 17th floor pending completion of permanent quarters on the 13th floor, said Percy Wilson, managing director of the Mart.

Warehouse space will be retained in the Carson wholesale building.

The new quarters will accommodate both the offices and display rooms of the floor covering division and serve as controling unit for its branches.

STOCKS CLIMB TO NEW PEAKS IN FAST TRADE

Profit Selling Slows Rate of Rise.

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—The stock market today finished its best week since mid-December with assorted leaders making modest headway in the face of profit taking on the advance to highest average levels in more than a year.

News was little changed, but some recently buoyant pivotals were sold on the belief that the upswing may have gone too far. Fractional advances were well distributed from the start and irregularly higher trends ruled at the close.

Trading was the fastest for a two hour session since Nov. 7, transfers totaling 504,780 shares compared with 437,790 last Saturday. The Associated Press 60 stock average closed with a net advance of 0.1 to 42.7, its third successive penetration of new high ground—highest since early October, 1941, despite a slight dip in the rail group and lack of progress by the utilities.

A. T. & T. Is Soft Spot.

American Telephone was a soft spot in belated recognition of lower earnings, but its early loss of 1⅛ was cut to ⅜. Santa Fe gained ½ as the system reported 11 months' net was double that a year ago. United States Steel and Bethlehem were off ⅜ and ⅛ as fourth quarter steel earnings estimates were revised downward.

War news was a sustaining influence thruout the week, gains being shown every day except Tuesday. Business developments and hopes that congress would shy away from piling more taxes on corporations inspired bidding. The President's budget message failed to stir the market. Broadest advances on the largest turnover of the year appeared yesterday with prime stocks leading. Part of the buying was attributed to conversion of idle funds of important investors into dividend payers to help offset heavy income tax demands.

RAIL BONDS EXTEND GAINS.

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—Further broad buying of rails today boosted the Associated Press average of 20 carrier issues to the highest level since early 1938. Fair demand developed for selected industrial and utility liens ranging from speculative to top investment ratings.

Rails achieved their peak in the face of profit selling, as the group remained responsive to favorable earnings and prospects for resumption of more interest payments.

Advances of South American obligations helped lift the foreign average to a new high for 1942-'43. United States government loans were steady and quiet. Transactions totaled $6,767,900 face value, against last Saturday's $10,214,600, largest for a two hour session since Sept. 9, 1939.

CHICAGO STOCKS CLIMB.

Prices were higher on the Chicago Stock exchange yesterday on turnover of 15,000 shares. Ninety issues were traded, of which 51 advanced, 10 declined, and 29 were unchanged.

Volume leaders included General Motors and Utah Radio, closing unchanged; Marshall Field, up ¼, and General Electric, up ⅛. Ten stocks reached new 1942-'43 highs on fractional advances.

RENEGOTIATION.

A new item of vital importance to stockholders will, or should, appear in the 1942 annual reports of companies doing war work. This new item is a statement as to the status of the company's earnings in relation to the contract price renegotiation law.

The renegotiation law authorizes the war, navy, and treasury departments, and the maritime commission, to reëxamine all their contracts to determine whether or not the contractor is making an excessive profit. The treasury handles lend-lease buying, and suppliers of goods under that program are subject to the renegotiation law. These government agencies are the sole judges as to what constitutes excessive profits, and they are empowered to recapture any such excesses.

The law applies to contracts and subcontracts made subsequent to April 28, 1942, and to those already in existence at that date provided final payment had not been made on them.

Many corporations have voluntarily given up a large part of the profits they have made on war contracts by refunding cash or sharply cutting their prices, while others have set aside reserves to cover this liability. Since the law does not provide an exact definition of excessive profits, nor establish a yardstick by which they can be measured, it is not possible for corporate management to estimate liability with any degree of accuracy.

An amendment to the law authorizes its administrators to make final or other agreements with contractors for future as well as past periods. When a contractor has been given a "clearance," there can be no further renegotiation of his contract, barring fraud, malfeasance, or willful misrepresentation of a material fact.

Unless and until a war contractor has completed his renegotiation or has received a "clearance," earnings figures shown in an annual report may later be subjected to drastic revision.

Santa Fe Earnings Climb in November, 11 Months

November net income of the Santa Fe railroad climbed to $8,643,596 from $1,709,114 in November a year ago, the company announced yesterday. Eleven months' net income rose to $64,305,321, equal to $24.15 a common share, from $25,535,202, or $8.05 a share, in the corresponding 1941 period.

GRAINS EXTEND PRICE UPTURNS; OATS SET PEAKS

Southwestern Interests Purchase Wheat.

Grain prices advanced again on the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday. Oats led the rise with gains of as much as 1 cent a bushel, May selling at 59½ cents, a new seasonal high. No. 1 white oats sold in the cash market at 62½ cents, equaling the highest price since 1928.

Wheat, corn, and rye futures rose ⅛ cent or more at one time, but profit taking developed. Wheat closed ⅛ to ⅜ cent higher; oats, ⅛ to ¾ cent, and rye, up ⅛ to ¼ cent. Corn finished unchanged to ⅛ cent higher.

Report Sales to Mexico.

Brokers who act for southwestern cash grain interests were persistent buyers of wheat futures, regarded as a reflection of reported sales to Mexico of 3 million bushels of hard winter wheat to replace purchases originally made in Canada but on which shipment by rail has been barred. There was also buying on an announcement that government purchases of flour for lend-lease and military purposes in the last two weeks had been about 1,600,000 barrels, equal to 7,200,000 bushels of wheat.

Many grain men expect that a revision of price ceiling regulations on cash corn will be announced within a few days, possibly Monday, to correct many of the inequalities of which grain handlers have complained.

Buy Canadian Oats.

American interests are reported to have bought large quantities of oats in Canada. May oats closed in Winnipeg at 51½ cents, the ceiling price in that market. No. 3 Canadian western cash oats, which command a substantial premium over the May future in Chicago, are quoted at equal to about 44½ cents in American money.

STOP 'MASSACRE' OF MANY BAKERS, BYRNES IS ASKED

Washington, D. C., Jan. 16 (AP).—Sen. Clyde Reed [R., Kas.] contended today that between 5,000 and 10,000 small bakers are about to be forced out of business by government price regulations and complained to James F. Byrnes, stabilization director, against "the massacre of small business men upon any such scale."

Reed was joined in his protest by other members of the Kansas congressional delegation. Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry [R., Neb.] said Reed's letter also expressed his sentiments.

Small bakers, said Reed, were caught in a squeeze between the established ceiling price for their bread and new ceilings on flour, which recently were increased about 10 per cent at the wholesale level. Bakers are to absorb the additional cost thru operating economies, but Reed said the cost of producing bread has gone up about nine mills a loaf since last March, while suggested economies could save no more than three mills.

Reed said he preferred to leave remedial steps to Byrnes: "Mr. Byrnes has authority over all elements of this problem. "Let Mr. Byrnes supply the equitable remedy."

WOMAN'S GREAT OPPORTUNITY
During 1942, I successfully advised hundreds of women how and what to do to qualify for high paid jobs in war production work. I am happy to say there are many who have taken my advice and are now drawing big pay in defense plants.
In order to give more women in the Chicago area an opportunity to know their qualifications, where and how to apply for employment and where and how to learn the proper use of sharp and hand tools, I will be at Hotel Morrison, Chicago, from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. tomorrow, and I will gladly advise all who call, how to secure training for big-pay war production jobs.
All should share in victory as high paid workers. If you are qualified, it is your duty to apply at the nearest war plant. If not, stop holding your hands and complaining that you don't know how or what to do. You can have advice without obligation—a key to higher wages, security, and future career by calling or writing.

HERO!

Tales of heroic men abound in any war. On this page are the pictures and stories of two—one, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, who has continued a glorious career over a period of two world conflicts; the other a young man who came to fame over Guadalcanal. (On page eight is a science story about the effect of thirst, hunger, and exposure on men like Rickenbacker who are forced to spend long periods without proper supplies.)

THE indestructible Eddie Rickenbacker, who a few weeks ago in the South Pacific again cheated death, was the American ace of aces in World War I. His score of 26 aerial victories far surpassed all others. His squadron—the famous 94th (Hat in Ring)—led them all with 69 victories.

Born at Columbus, O., Oct. 8, 1890, Rickenbacker drove his first auto race in 1909. When the United States went to war his lack of education kept him out of aviation. But he enlisted as General Pershing's chauffeur, hoping his chance would come in France. He played sick for two weeks while taking flying lessons secretly, soloed after 12 lessons, and won a transfer to the air corps.

He qualified as an ace by notching the five required victories in less than a month, and received the congressional medal of honor, the distinguished service cross with nine palms, the French croix de guerre, and membership in the Legion of Honor for his heroism.

After the war he headed the Indianapolis speedway, then became general manager of Eastern Air lines, of which he now is president and chief stockholder.

An inspection flight Feb. 27, 1941, nearly cost his life when the plane crashed near Atlanta, Ga. Eight were killed. On Oct. 21, 1942, one of a party of seven in an army bomber, he left Hawaii on a mission for Secretary of War Stimson. The plane was lost. After weeks the nation gave up hope. But his wife said: "Eddie will turn up. He's too old a hand to get lost in any airplane now." Stimson said, "He's an exception to ordinary rules." The party finally was rescued Nov. 13, 600 miles north of Samoa.

Characteristically, after the rescue Rickenbacker completed his mission to Australia, New Guinea, and the Solomons.

ACE OVER GUADALCANAL!

By WALTER SIMMONS

MAJ. JOHN L. SMITH is a hard-eyed, taut-jawed man, cool in the crises that come to a United States marine pilot, slow to speak of his successes afterward. At this moment he was "upstairs" with his squadron, Fighting 23, high over the tangled, Jap-infested jungles of Guadalcanal. The date was Aug. 30.

There was a thick overcast. Occasionally a sudden rain squall would strike like the blow of an unfriendly fist. But a moment later the plane, a Grumman Wildcat, would burst thru into the fleece beyond.

Smith was thinking of a curious Jap the marines had captured in ground fighting a few days before. Hands up, the Jap came running out of the woods and surrendered to a patrol. "To hell with Tojo," he grinned. "I'm from New York."

But these amusing thoughts had to be brushed aside when a swarm of enemy Zeros appeared—as simply as that. Smith was not surprised. He was not annoyed, and he felt no fear, tho the enemy numbered more than a score and only one other plane in the marine squadron was anywhere near.

He went to work methodically, like a man exterminating insects.

In the next 90 seconds Maj. Smith shot down three Zeros. Two of them crumpled slowly and seemed to fall apart in the air as streams of .50-caliber machine gun bullets laced thru their thin metal shells. The first was the easiest. The major caught it from the rear. Meanwhile the squadron wingman was having a hard time. Smith banked his Grumman sharply and caught this menacing Jap full in the sights.

The third victim was not so easy. Roaring up from beneath, he had the belly of Smith's plane sown with bullets before Smith could drop the nose and go at him head on.

"One of his bullets shattered my windshield but missed me," the major explained later when pressed for details of the fight. "My own bullets were tearing him apart and huge chunks of his plane were falling. We tore past each other less than 15 feet apart. The Jap pilot finally lost control and his ship went into a spin. The pilot bailed out, but I didn't see his chute open."

The fighting major turned for home, well satisfied. The other Zeros had disappeared in the weather, and gas was running too low to do much looking. Besides, Pilot Lees, in another plane, had bagged a victim himself. Maj. Smith had observed this action in passing.

Now he was in a rain squall that slowed the plane like a child's wagon run into deep sand. But the rain ended as suddenly as it began, and the Grumman purred for home along the coast.

NEGROES CONQUER FROZEN NORTH

By WARREN BAKER

Whitehorse, Yukon Territory.

AMONG the 11,000 soldiers who built the Alcan military highway, most of whom are still in the north maintaining and operating it, there are three large contingents of Negro troops. And there isn't an officer up here, from Col. John W. Wheeler, the engineer in charge, on down, who won't tell you what a great job they did and are doing.

"The Negro troops have distinguished themselves," said Colonel Wheeler, who is a former Chicagoan. "Of the 1,630 miles of road they have built about 460. Working under severe handicaps of subzero weather and moving ahead so rapidly that their living quarters were primitive and sketchy, they have nevertheless constructed a highway thru some of the most rugged wilderness on the North American continent.

"The morale of all the Negro regiments has been equal to that of the white troops. From the health records it appears they have withstood well the rigors of the north. The interest they display in the accomplishment of their task is remarkable. And they are very good cooks. Some of the best meals on the road can be eaten in their camps."

One of the astonishing facts about the work of these men is that most of them came from cities. They had never done any rough work before. They never had seen a caterpillar tractor. Factory engineers came in with the equipment and taught the boys how to use it. The schools were set up in June, and by the time the going got really rough they were army engineers, with all the spirit of that hard-bitten lot.

Their road camps were, and in many cases still are, as Colonel Wheeler said, primitive. A good many of those boys are still living in tents, altho some huts are being erected for them. The plumbing is of the outdoor variety—very outdoor. And on the lower sector of the highway, where most of these troops have done their work, the weather seems ever more bitter than it does farther north, where the mountains temper the blasts of wind that sweep across the lower tundras.

And their work is no easier now. For instance, in one area the highway runs right across the foot of a glacier. The ice flows in during the night and they have to blast out a new track across about a mile of it every morning.

One of the most interesting of the men I met among these boys is Capt. Edward Carroll, chaplain of one of the colored regiments. Captain Carroll is an unassuming, studious little man, a graduate of both the Yale divinity school and Columbia university. His wife and 4-year-old son are now living in Washington, D. C.

Captain Carroll came into the army in October of 1941 and has been in the north without relief or leave since May.

"My idea is to develop recreational programs and show men how to be good men in their everyday life, not preach a lot of dogma," he said. "We want to meet the whole needs of man and help him with his everyday problems, not just run a church service on Sunday.

"Of course, sex is our biggest problem. It's bound to be where you have thousands of men together in a wilderness. Nevertheless, I have tried to discourage war marriages among the men who get away on furlough."

Chaplain Carroll has set up a library of 500 books in a double tent "recreation hall." There are tables, writing paper supplied by the Fayetteville, N. C., USO. There are games to keep the men occupied when they have any leisure time. Last summer they pitched horseshoes at midnight.

Capt. Edward Carroll, chaplain.

When Chaplain Carroll arrived in the north he brought with him one movie, a film of religious character called "The Power of God," based on modern life. He has almost worn it out. Some of the men go to see it twice a day. Until Capt. Russell Swann arrived recently and gave shows of movies and of his own magic bag of tricks there had been no other entertainment.

The men tame and pet everything. There are big husky dogs everywhere, mostly pets, for there is little dog sledding in this area. You are just as likely as not to find a fluffy husky puppy curled up in your sleeping bag when it comes time to turn in.

Captain Carroll said he had been surprised at the few "scrapes" his men got into. There are few fights, and there has seldom been a court martial of more serious character than a summary. The only trouble has been caused, Captain Carroll said, by the occasional civilian bootlegger who brings in whisky and retails it at prohibition prices.

Captain Carroll has organized a band and bought a sound system with two speakers which he hangs up in the trees of a camp clearing and with his generator and phonograph on a truck gives open air concerts.

He started off with swing records, but now has obtained recordings of one opera, "Carmen." He reads the story and explains it, then plays the score. A big library of records has been built up in the recreation tent from gifts sent the boys from back home. In the tent was the first Tribune this correspondent had seen in six weeks.

Another lad who has done an outstanding job with the Negro engineers is Sergt. Tommy Walker of 5758 South Park way, Chicago. He was a ranking colored tennis player and a graduate of West Virginia State college. His job is to find the drinking water and see to it that it's drinkable. After the cold set in he had to supervise the digging of wells at each camp, because in this country there is no open water in the winter.

Much of the difficulties and hardships these men have suffered are now being alleviated by the northwest service command, set up for the purpose of providing them with needs and wants. The command takes in all the territory in which the American army is serving in Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon and the Northwest Territories, with bases at Skagway and Fairbanks in Alaska. Organization of the command did not get well under way until early October, so there has been little time to provide more than necessities.

I wanted to know how the Negroes were standing the cold. Col. Walter F. von Zelinski, chief medical officer here, was asked how his percentages of patients ran.

"We have learned a significant thing," he said. "The Negro can stand the heat better than the white man, and he stands the cold just as well. We may have a few more frozen ears and faces among the Negroes, but that's because they are more likely to expose themselves unnecessarily. But the Negro piles on all the clothes he's issued and goes right ahead with his work."

And you should see them digging holes for telephone poles in ground frozen eight feet deep and where they have to build a fire at every stop to keep from freezing.

And how do they get along with their white officers and comrades? Here's a little story that came out of Kluane lake the night before the opening of the highway to traffic:

In the spruce forests the distinguished guests for next day's dedication were bedded down in the barracks of a division camp for the truck drivers. A Negro private had been assigned to keep the barracks warm and the fires going.

Brig. Gen. James A. O'Connor, the commander, had rolled up in his sleeping bag. Souvenir programs of the event had been prepared, and when the soldier came in to tend his fires one was sticking out of a hip pocket.

The boy eyed the general's quiet form, then he walked over and gently shook the sleeping robe. "General, sir," he said, "would you kindly put your name on this program for me?"

The general roused and pushed back the flap. "What did you say, young man?" he inquired sleepily. The soldier repeated his request.

"Sure I will," said the general. While the soldier waited General O'Connor got out of his bed in his long woollies, hunted up his spectacles, and autographed the program.

"That's the sort of thing we're all fighting for," said Bartlett later, when the boy had gone.

THE ULTIMATE GAL!

By MAUREEN DALY

(Author of "Seventeenth Summer.")

SO YOU'D thought you had met her! Here it was—the Lana Turner, Mona Lisa, love of your life, all rolled into a jive jacket and wearing saddle shoes; and you were the lucky boy who was dating her. You liked everything about her. You liked the way she walked, the way she talked, the way she wore her hair, and the way other boys liked her. She was the kind of girl you knew your mother would like and your father would think was wonderful.

You got to like her so well yourself that you would have given her all your time, orchids six days a week, and your sugar ration card if you thought she had wanted them. In fact, she got on your mind so much that you even told your kid brother about her just to say her name. All things considered, you decided that you had really run across something very special, and you didn't care who knew it. This was it. This without a doubt was the ultimate babe.

You found out that she wore well no matter where you took her. She danced smoothly to slow music, and you couldn't ask for anything more groovey on the solid numbers. She had that beat. She looked sharp no matter what she wore. Her skirts were always pressed and her sweaters neat, and her hair had that sleek and shiny look like a shampoo ad.

At dances she looked like some one you'd borrowed from the fashion magazines just for the night. She forgot the black and sequins and gave you something to remember by turning out in something soft and fluffy that looked like raspberries and whipped cream.

And she knew the right thing to say to every one. You could count on that. When you went out for a coke and were sitting around the drug store she could keep the other fellows calling their shots, and when she happened to meet your older sister she knew the right things about books and plays and what's on the concert program next week. And you could tell by the way she talked that she knew what she was talking about.

You got happy-headed just listening to her, because she had the jump on what movies Stephen Longstreet wrote and what ones he didn't; whose band was mild and mellow and who got the big buildup in the jive journals last week.

She took school seriously, too. Her grades were always at the right end of the alphabet, and she was honest about book reports and outside reading. She worked hard to get one of the best parts in the dramatic club plays and was proud of it. She was good at sports and used to wear a short black skirt lined with plaid when you went ice skating. She worked on Saturdays, knit most of her own sweaters, and always had to stay in on Thursday nights because that was her night to help with the family ironing.

She was good to talk to. She could keep you laughing for a whole date, or she could sit and worry and wonder with you when the 18-19-year-old draft law was passed. She knew where the Buna-Gona area was without looking at a map, and she never missed a chance to hear Cecil Brown and to tune in Clifton Utley.

She considered the inflation issue as a personal problem and took to wearing white blouses with bright wool jersey peasant skirts instead of buying something new and expensive. She really listened when you wanted to talk about your post-war plans, what college you wanted to attend, and what you wanted to be and why when your name finally wound up in "Who's Who." She was hep to everything you were thinking even before you had it thought.

And she was fun, too. You could always count on her for a good time. She was wonderful for a good moon and a rare $5 date, and yet she could make a quick walk to the corner drug store for a small coke seem like an evening with orchids at the Pump room. She had dated a lot before, and a lot of fellows were still looking up her phone number, and they all talked about her as one of the swellest smoothies they had ever known. And besides that, she had enough good girl friends to organize a Girl Scout troop. She liked her own family so well that you suddenly began to appreciate yours more. She seemed to have everything.

She was the kind of girl you liked to talk about to other fellows and think about to yourself when you were alone. And somehow you just never figured that this sort of thing could happen to you. You'd drawn the high card and couldn't figure out why you were lucky enough to get odds on such a good bet. She was everything you had ever thought of or wanted or seen in the movies. That was the ultimate babe. And you knew it.

But that was a few weeks ago, or maybe a couple of months, or perhaps it happened 'way last spring. But anyway it's over. It all happened so fast that you still don't quite get the pitch. It just happened that you called her for a date one Friday night, and she said she was sorry, but she would be busy. You might have gone out together a few times after that, but she kept dating other fellows more and more, and you realized suddenly that you were getting the brushoff.

At first you didn't know what you felt—if you'd just come thru a couple of tough rounds with Joe Louis or if every one feels that badly when his heart stops beating. And somehow it wasn't her fault. She hadn't taken you for any kind of a ride. You still met her on the street or with the crowd, and she was as nice and friendly as ever, but it just wasn't there any more. Not that old feeling. And a few weeks before you would have bet your last phone slug that this was going to last forever.

Then suddenly there didn't seem to be any point to anything. It wasn't easy to tell the other fellows—even your best friends—that your girl had decided to take the high road and she was getting over it faster than you were. It did something to your Casanova complex. It was hard to concentrate on school work; it was hard to be pleasant at home; and the meaning seemed to have dropped out of everything. It seemed pointless to look forward to week-ends or to save money for other dates, and it even seemed silly for your family to keep the phone in now that you didn't have any one to call any more.

You can sit at home trying to study and not even see the pages, with so many memories going thru your head, and you can try going to a movie, but that doesn't help either, because it just makes you think of the times you and she went to movies together, and you wonder who she's with now and what she's doing. Dancing with another girl, talking with another girl—nothing seems to be as much fun as it used to be. You don't want to go around with your heart on your sleeve, but somehow you just can't make it go back to where it used to be. You are really in a bad spot.

And no one can help you out. That is the sort of thing you have to work off yourself as painlessly and as quickly as you can. It sometimes helps a little to rationalize. Most high school heartbeats don't last into the home and hearth stage anyway, so maybe yours was just one of those things. Maybe what looks like the end of the world from here will just be something to smile over when you're fat and forty and sitting home making sailboats for Junior. Just try to figure that it wasn't your fault and it wasn't the girl's fault either if she suddenly stopped thinking star dust every time she looked at you. It just happened. And the next step is to forget it.

You can find your own ways—working harder at school, getting another girl, or just plain making up your mind not to take the hard way and resolving not to cry over lost loves. Remember that it doesn't mean that you're the forgotten man, jinxed, or that fate has put the finger on you, because such disappointments happen to every one. Of course it isn't as easy as it sounds, but the only answer is—a lost love—you've got it? Well, forget it! After all, she did.

THE VILLAINS ARE JUST SOFTIES!

LOOKING AT HOLLYWOOD WITH HEDDA HOPPER

This monster of "Frankenstein," and the mild-mannered man with the dogs, of course, are Boris Karloff.

Peter Lorre, the magnificent menace, has a passion for sentimental songs.

SCRATCH a Hollywood tough guy and you'll find a softy every time. Maybe a psychologist has the answer. I'm sure I haven't. But the fact remains that Hollywood's real hard-pans, the certified cinematic villains, are almost without exception the kindest, most considerate and friendly fellows in town.

Maybe it's because they get so tired being villainous and nasty before the camera that they shed their characterizations as they shed their makeup at quitting time. Maybe at heart an A1 heavy is a sentimentalist with an inferiority complex—a soft-hearted guy who would rather tat than tear people to pieces. Just as the dividing line between comedy and tragedy is razor-thin, so the difference between a dyed in the wool villain and a low comic may be well-nigh indistinguishable.

At any rate the fact stands that Hollywood's petunia growers and mild-mannered gentlemen are, in the main at least, its most fearsome acting customers. There are plenty of examples to bear out the facts.

There is, for instance, the champion heavy of all times—Boris Karloff, or Karloff the horrible. There's no villain in Hollywood to whom Boris Karloff will bow. With an editorial curtsy to the late Lon Chaney, I'll put up Boris Karloff against all comers as, filmically at least, the meanest man in the world. Yet that same horrible horror, sans makeup, is the closest thing to a gentleman Hollywood can produce. As English as a bobby, Boris conducts his life along temperate lines. His wildest excess would be a second helping of crumpets at his afternoon tea or a particularly spirited session at cricket. Flowers he loves—not to pour poison on, but to grow and look at.

Nor is he alone in his mild-mannered habits. Peter Lorre has the same love for flora and fauna. Peter, whose face in the picture "M" held the whole continent of Europe in terror, is a veritable Caspar Milquetoast in real life.

Lorre's passion is singing old, sentimental songs. Then he weeps real tears and sighs as he turns back memory's pages in a welter of nostalgia. "You Made Me What I Am Today—I Hope You're Satisfied," "Nellie," "Mary Is a Grand Old Name"—these are the musical chromos Peter Lorre likes. During the filming of "Casablanca" Peter became so infected with the songs of a gentler age that he even got Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman to make it a trio. He has an old-fashioned organ in his Palm Springs hide-out cottage where he sits and pumps away while the old songs pour from him in more or less melodic profusion. We have no gentler soul than Peter Lorre.

Porter Hall, whose film forte is sneaky and despicable villains, is strictly a family man, so appalled by his own parts that he wouldn't even allow his son to see him on the screen until the youngster was 12. This Hall character, vile on the screen, is the type of guy who actually hunts up people to help out in real life. During his years at Paramount he had more friends among the prop men and juicers than their entire star roster put together.

Brian Donlevy, that red-meat individual with the caress that has a sting of death in it, spends his off-time leisure writing poetry, and pretty doggoned good it is, too; while Raymond Massey of the leer and sly manner school (except when he's permitted to portray Lincoln) devotes his extracurricular time (or at least did until he joined the Canadian army) to his aviary and feathered friends. Massey frankly admits liking tea parties—yes, with tea, not martinis, the only drink in sight.

Alan Ladd, the cruelest killer of the current season, is a petunia grower and a collector of odd pets, while John Garfield, who won his movie spurs by being uncommonly common, is happiest when making goo-goo eyes at his daughter Katherine, whom he ceremoniously drives to school each morning and tucks into her little trundle bed at night.

J. Carrol Naish, the slimiest one, makes children's recordings of bedtime stories when not before the cameras, and has sunk some of his spare coin in a beauty shop, just to confound his critics. Hardy, two-fisted Victor McLaglen is said to give way to tears at the mention of a tough-luck story. Spends his spare time trying to rehabilitate youngsters who have become antisocial, and is happiest when leading Boy Scout troops or staging outdoor rodeos for youngsters, or just leading the band—any band.

The list is endless. It includes big, beefy Jack Carson, a blustering blowhard who's lamblike at home. Jack putters, offers to fix anything and everything, and to entertain Jack Jr. he has a rare collection of faces or makes purring animal sounds for hours on end.

Arthur Kennedy, who played a drunken louse in "They Died with Their Boots On," and currently is the Brontë sisters' liquor-drenched brother in "Devotion," a grade A no-good bum, spends the majority of his time home writing books for babies.

You figure it out. The sight of all these male animals going soft and limp at the sight of babies or a feminine face kind of takes the gimp out of me. Why is it most women like a tough guy, and many a girl even dreams of finding one who will slug her down if she steps out of line, so she can waste a lifetime of devotion on the big bully? I'm sure that's why the heavies are so popular on the screen—and women can always hope, can't they?

There's a raft of others, too. Sydney Greenstreet, the oily, nefarious fat man who all but ruined a half dozen lives in "The Maltese Falcon," did his best to foul up Paul Henreid and Ingrid Bergman in "Casablanca." And how he adored the Japanese-paid agent in "Across the Pacific"! But in real life Sydney hates himself on the screen and longs for the good old joviality and fat comedy parts he used to play with the Lunts. Greenstreet's chief joy is keeping scrapbooks for all the youngsters of his neighborhood. There's a twisteroo for you!

Flinty hard Charles Bickford is soft as soap offscreen and has been known to look for those who need stray cash. Speaking of soft touches, one must mention George Raft, a push-over where broken-down ex-pugs are concerned. George doesn't know how many stumble bums he supports.

Akim Tamiroff, who lords it over the weak with a bull whip in pictures, is happiest when sentimental Russian folk music is being played. He's done much to encourage the musical talent of youngsters. Then there's Edward G. Robinson. Well, there he is—and you can have him, with all his art collection and everything that goes with it.

Blustering Alan Hale is a meek, mild soul, seeking out young players, trying to help them over the bumps. That same is true of Humphrey Bogart, ace killer. Claude Rains, Henry Victor, Lon Chaney Jr.—all are quiet, peace-loving citizens.

And that's the villainous setup in our town. Find a bad man and you've found a cream puff every time.

But the heroes—O, boy! Wouldn't I just love to sink my fangs in them some day and spill the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth!

PRIVATE FAY ON PARADE!

This is another report from Pvt. William C. Fay, on leave from the Tribune sports department, about his life in the army.

WHEN Super Cereals wants to sell vast quantities of breakfast food to Ontherun Cafeterias, Inc., it happens quite often that Super's sales manager will invite Ontherun's purchasing agent over for a week-end. Champagne flows exactly like flowing champagne. A fine time is had by all. Ontherun's representative staggers into his office with a thumping headache on Monday morning in time to order nine or ten carloads of Crunchie Wunchies from Colossal Cereals, Super's hated rival.

The army uses slightly less subtle methods in selling us on the merits of the product it has been peddling to soldiers for a long, long time. The brand name of this product is MUD. It is composed of water (40 per cent), dirt (60 per cent), and glue (20 per cent). Glue, the hidden ingredient, gives army mud its magnificent mucilaginous properties which are the despair of competing manufacturers.

There are no frills to the army's introductory offer. No box tops. No coupons to clip. No testimonials to write.

Nothing like that. The army's introductory method is simplicity itself. The inductee is loaded into a truck, the earlier in the morning the better, and if it is still dark, wonderful. From 18 to 25 co-inductees are promptly packed around the initial inductee. Presumably he is a fragile guy, and the army does not want him to bounce around in the back of the truck. Skilful packing precludes broken bones and virtually eliminates contusions.

Of course it is raining. The truck, one of a long convoy, finds a mud road and climbs toward the hills. Two hours later the rain has turned into a cloudburst, and the hills are mountains.

The truck lurches 25 yards, sinks axle deep in the muck. Inductees climb out, find rocks and planks to place beneath the wheels. The truck lurches forward again.

Finally mud buries the wheels. Rocks and planks no longer anchor the spinning rubber. Reluctantly the driver signals to use the winch. Inductees unwind the steel cable from the spool between the front bumpers, stagger to a tree, and fasten the winch hook around its trunk.

The cable sings taut. The truck slides forward. Inductees climb aboard for another 25 yards. It should be emphasized the winch is used only in bogs and morasses when manual efforts have failed utterly. The army does not like to get its winches muddy.

The convoy reaches the bivouac area. Inductees look for the softest mud and pitch a tent over it. They sleep in it and next morning eat it with their breakfast. They march in it all morning.

By noon the inductee is convinced army mud is pretty sticky stuff, but he knows from experience it can be navigated on foot or in trucks. That is what the army wants him to know, but is the army satisfied? Not by a mountainside of mud. The inductee marches, eats, and sleeps in the mud another two or three days until the sun comes out again.

The army usually has a reason for everything. However, in the case of mud, why take 72 hours to teach a lesson that can be learned in 24? As Private Haggerty observed one cold morning while wringing out his pants, that's rubbing it in.

YOUR DIVORCE—AND HOW TO AVOID IT!

By MARJORIE BINFORD WOODS

It was during a visit to her sister that Helen discovered she still had allure.

This is the second of a series of six articles on the subject of the problems that make marriages unstable. In last week's article war marriages were discussed. The writer is author of the new book, "Your Wedding—How to Plan and Enjoy It."

"WE'RE incompatible," Alice Bradley explained to her friends when she and Don decided to throw their marriage onto the scrap heap of divorce.

"We can't get along together . . . and that's all there is to it," she said, dismissing the subject as tho she were closing a book.

But it wasn't that easy. They had thought "incompatibility." was a justifiable reason for letting their marriage fall to pieces. It was the meaningful word that was scrawled across their divorce papers and the courts interpreted it as cruel and inhuman treatment and accepted it.

Now, three years later, Alice, a wiser and more mature woman, shakes her head and says, "I know now what that word 'incompatibility' really means. It is a shameful admission of failure in trying to understand the mental makeup and personality of the man I married."

It's too late now for Alice and Don. They have tasted the bitterness of their marriage failure and know that it was only because they didn't try hard enough for success when they had the opportunity.

But what about you! If at this very minute you are walking toward the edge of a precipice which is likely to hurl you into the abyss of separation, step back and look around. Once you have toppled off it's a long climb back to the peak where happiness was within reach if you had only grasped it.

Are you saying to yourself, "We're incompatible?" Are you, according to Webster, "incapable of existing together in agreement or harmony?" A famous psychologist has an answer for you. He says that almost any two persons are compatible if they try to be and if they know what they are doing. Almost any two are incompatible if they don't know what they are doing and if they don't try to be compatible.

"But John doesn't seem to be the same person he was when I married him," you say.

Well, think back on your engagement days and those first few weeks of married bliss. You were completely wrapped up in each other; nothing outside of your being together and enjoying mutual interests seemed to matter. Either consciously or unconsciously you were trying with all your might and main to please each other and enjoy every minute of your association together.

As John's helpmate and partner you soon discovered, after a few gastronomic disasters, that apple fritters and sausage for breakfast were enemies to his tummy; that even a casual reminder of an overdue haircut was a delicate subject which rubbed him the wrong way. John, in turn, learned not to ridicule your love of poetry even tho he considered it a foolish waste of time; he was more careful in his criticisms after that one thoughtless "Why-in-the-'ell don't you straighten up this desk drawer"—an outburst which brought on an avalanche of wifely tears.

Gradually you each began to understand the many colors of your respective personalities and you were especially careful not to wave the red flag if blue was the salient mood of the moment. Now, as time has moved on, have you continued this study of delving deeper than the surface; of finding out what makes each of you tick on the inside, what each feels, thinks, and wants most out of life? And have you both earnestly tried to detour around the hazards which you know are bound to bring bad hangovers?

It's not a simple task that's completed after the first few months or years of marriage. It's a lifetime job if you really meant it when you so solemnly swore "till death do us part." You do your part willingly enough with your children. No sacrifice is too great that insures their welfare and contentment. You fight against inflicting your temper on them; you hang on to your patience for dear life and most important of all, you try to understand all their little quirks of character and deal with them psychologically. Isn't your marriage worth just as much effort?

Dick and Helen Stevens had been married 10 years. Dickie Jr. was eight and a half when his mother and dad decided by mutual agreement that they were incompatibly mated and that divorce was the only solution. That was two years ago and now Helen looks back sorrowfully to say:

"I wish divorce had never been invented. It was a great mistake in our case and I know now that incompatibility was only a coverup phrase for misunderstanding each other and not having the patience and intelligence to try to understand and work out our difficulties."

As newlyweds they started out as the two happiest persons in the world, Helen says. Dick was making a livable salary and life was one delightful honeymoon during that first year of "playing house" in their shining new apartment. Fundamentally they were a serious couple, and soon they began to make plans for a baby to share their love and grow with it. During the months before the baby came Dick became more tender and thoughtful and Helen more dependent and loving.

The baby was expensive, tho, and money problems began to furrow Dick's brow. Helen was so absorbed with formulas, daily washings and middle-of-the-night treks to the nursery that there was little time left for avowals of love. Helen, the alluring bride, became the harassed mother who barely had time to powder her nose or comb her hair.

The next few years followed in the same pattern and glamor was no longer a part of their lives. After six years of routine life Dick had come to take Helen more or less for granted—and as long as her child demanded most of her time and attention she scarcely noticed how little she and Dick seemed to have in common any more.

But in the seventh year of their marriage frustrations and new desires began to grow within her. She became dissatisfied with her husband's absorption in the daily newspaper and his general inattentiveness to her domestic trivia. She suddenly realized that she wanted more from life than she was getting . . . renewal of courtship, emotional response, and a restoration of her lost individuality.

The real awakening came when Helen accepted her younger sister's insistent invitation to visit her for a few days in another city. She was reluctant to leave her family to the care of a maid even but Dick insisted that she needed a change.

It was during these few days of "change" with her sister, Irene, that she made a discovery. Why, she still had allure. Irene's men friends with their pretty compliments made her feel young again. The way they looked at her and fed her vanity was honey to her hungry soul.

A new outfit, a flattering hairdo and a new sparkle to her eyes made a Cinderella of Helen in those exciting days.

As the train carried her homeward, after a chummy little farewell party, she resolved that from now on there would be a renewal of romance and love making in this methodical marriage of theirs.

The train was late in arriving, however, and she caught Dick yawning as she tripped down the station steps to be greeted by his pecking kiss. He was glad to see her, he said. He was dogged tired after a long day at the office and a strenuous evening spent in entertaining Dickie Jr. at home. No need to ask if she'd had a good time, for he could tell she was still high in the clouds the way she chattered.

She rushed into Dickie's room to give him a big bear hug and then on a sudden impulse, when she was undressing, she got out her sachet-scented wedding nightgown of shimmering satin and lace. An irresistible love for her husband flowed thru her. She wanted to cuddle in his arms, whisper little intimacies and bask in his love.

But when she slipped into bed beside him she found to her dismay that already he was sound asleep with his back turned to her. Suddenly all the thrill and sparkle burned out of her. She felt hollow inside and completely let down. Dick roused himself to mumble sleepily how nice it was to have her home again and tomorrow they would talk everything over after a good night's rest.

to her homecoming was such a bitter disappointment that it left its indelible mark. Gradually in a thousand ways their marriage began to curl at the edges. The absence of eager attention and flattery from Dick convinced her that he didn't love her any longer. She became a shrew in the biting sarcasms she threw at him. He, in turn, reacting from wounded pride and bafflement that their marriage had taken such a turn, grew sullen and flew fom his wife's scenes as instinctively as he would from a wasp.

Finally the Rubicon was crossed and they did not so much as lift their eyes in search of a lifeboat to take them back to the other shore. Incompatibility was the answer, they told the judge. Even the common interest provided by their child was not strong enough to hold them together.

Dickie Jr., who remained with his mother, was baffled and worried by the separation. Her ex-husband is married again now, Helen reports, and she herself is finding a certain measure of satisfaction and stability in learning to manage a job without neglecting her child.

"But it is only a half life," she says, "and a bitter pill to swallow when I realize that I abandoned a full life by not appreciating the deep, intrinsic meaning of the word home. If only we had had the intelligence to go to a marriage counsel bureau when our marriage first became sick."

Disillusionment, petty differences, and small repeated irritations are more apt to break up marriages than calamities which require a real sacrifice, says an experienced divorce lawyer. Without love and a firm determination to make a success of marriage at all costs it is easy to let down the bars and easy for natural impulses to develop which may lead to the wrecking of a home.

"It was my continual bill-grumbling and selfishness in money spending which drove my wife from me," confesses Bill Graves, an ex-husband who made such a fetish of finances that he robbed married life of all pleasure and unwittingly sent his wife back to her old job—to a financial independence of her own—and eventually to the divorce court.

In the eyes of the world Connie Graves was a lucky wife. Bill had provided her with a house full of attractive furniture and was always showering her with gifts. As long as he was spending the money Bill was open handed and generous but just let Connie ask for an extra five for some personal gadget . . . or charge a few pots and pans to their department store account and a scene was bound to ensue. Cash and Connie were rarely on speaking terms and it's not surprising that she finally took to hiding some of the monthly bills from her husband and then in desperation secretly applied for her old secretarial job in order to cover up.

Too late Bill woke up to the fact that marriage is a partnership affair and that a wise husband doesn't keep sole control of the budget but forms a real-for-sure business arrangement with both money and responsibility divided.

As a recent survey shows, married couples do spend quite a lot of their off moments haggling over money. Love doesn't always give up the ghost and die because of these marital battles but after a few years of financial bickering other factors crowd in on the main issue. What oftentimes begins as a clean cut case of incompetence in managing may end in so-called incompatibility.

A budgeteer has suggested adding as a heading to the various food, shelter, clothing, personal, etc., columns of the budget book a separate one to be titled "Damn Foolishness." Much name calling and finger pointing could be eliminated by anticipating such expenditures and dubbing them by their right name.

"I tried to reform my husband," is the admission of fault made by a young divorcée who wishes (too late) that she hadn't tried to dominate her man and make him over to her order. "If a wife is smart she will let her husband be himself," she says. Of course you won't like everything you find in his character. But you can adapt yourself to his faults and refrain from making both your lives miserable by letting him do his own improving. If you expect the best from him he'll probably turn handsprings trying to live up to your opinion of him.

"A man's pride is like house paint," explains this ex-wife. "The least little scratch to the surface leaves its mark and every time his pride is wounded his resentment is aroused. And if it continues both love and marriage eventually are destroyed. One of the chief tasks of a wife is to build up her husband's pride in himself, in her and in their marriage."

Joe and Ellen Temple were just on the edge of divorce when Joe was called into the service. They had only had two years of married life but somehow things hadn't gone very well from the start. Joe had voiced the hope that Ellen would give up her job after they were married but she said she wouldn't know what to do with herself all day—and, anyway, they needed that extra money. His average weekly earnings were $50, hers $25. They pooled their income and started out with joyous anticipation in a $55 a month apartment, a part time cleaning maid and new furniture.

At first they tried to have friends in for dinner once or twice a week but after a while it seemed too much of an undertaking for Ellen along with a full time job. And they both begrudged the loss of sleep which the late dishwashing hours entailed. The alarm clock went off regularly at 7 o'clock every morning and from then on it was a marathon until they started for work in opposite directions at 8:30. Ellen left her office at 5 in the evening but invariably there was shopping or marketing to do and by the time she reached home Joe had finished the evening paper and had smoked himself into a nervous state. Both were hungry as bears and flung the food together for a meal that was eaten as hurriedly as it was bought.

After dinner there was the table to be cleared and the dishes to be washed. Ellen tried to discuss the happenings of the day with Joe but they all had such a warmed over flavor that she soon lost her zest for going into detail about things that held no real signifiance for him. She was so busy thinking her own thoughts that there seemed little time to be interested in what had happened to him at his office.

With so little to hold them together, both Ellen and Joe began to wonder if their marriage hadn't been a mistake. Scarcely a day went by that there wasn't a tiff between them. Perhaps Ellen had forgotten to send Joe's suit to the cleaners or Joe had neglected to pay the light bill. They were trivial, but each battle left its scars.

A few days before Joe knew he was to be inducted into the army they took time to talk over the situation. Surely there must be something more to married life. Each had hoped for companionship but both had been disappointed. They agreed that their interests were too divergent and the only thing they knew to do was to split up before it was too late to find some measure of happiness with somebody else. There were no tears or recriminations in this matter-of-fact talk. They promised to remain friends in spite of what happened.

But before they found time to do anything specific about their marital status Uncle Sam summoned Joe to an army camp and Ellen found herself feeling more than a little sad.

"I'm the girl who thought divorce would be simple if I didn't have a good time as a wife," she admits tearfully. "Now I know that you can't escape lightly from a marriage just because you enter lightly into it."

In Joe's absence their life together has taken on a new perspective. Ellen can see clearly why their marriage was headed for the divorce courts. They were pushing it themselves by the whirlwind life they were leading, she says. Now her main hope is that it isn't too late to rescue their romance and give it a real chance to grow. She is determined to do all in her power to make herself worthy of her soldier.

"Joe, dear," she says in one of her daily letters, "your going away has brought me to my senses. We can't get a divorce, you and I. Why, we haven't even started to live together yet in the real sense of the word. After this war is over—your wife is going to be waiting for you to make a real home for you. One that we're both going to be happy in for the rest of our lives. Suddenly, in a world where millions are suffering because some have forgotten the meaning of love, I have discovered that it is the most important thing there is. So let's fight for it until we win peace and each other again."

Montrose Avenue Woman a "DIE-HARD" Until She Discovered This!

"I raised 12 children and kept house in this one place 32 years. I was a real 'die-hard' about soap . . . I used the same kind of soap for my washing all those years. Then I discovered DUZ! Those DUZ suds went clean over the top of my machine! Now I wouldn't change back for anything. I've found DUZ does everything from grimy towels and heavy cleaning to washing my nicest rayon undies. C IS FOR CITRUS and VITAMINS

By MARY MEADE

THERE AREN'T any restrictions on the use of citrus fruits, which are reaching the peak of plentifulness right now. They are so important as suppliers of vitamin C to the diet that they have a place in every day's menu.

A glass of fresh orange juice or grapefruit juice every morning starts the day right. Follow that with a big bowl of hot oatmeal, cornmeal mush, or farina with milk and sugar or honey. Eat a strip of bacon if your refrigerator harbors that treat, and all the toast you want, provided you go easy on butter. Fill the coffee cup only three-fourths full if you are having trouble with your coffee ration, or drink cereal beverage or one of the nutritious drinks which you can prepare from a powdered mixture and hot water or milk.

We've got to revise a few of our meal planning precepts for the duration. During years of plenty it is fine for us to shy away from serving one food several times in one day. These days we must use the foods which are most abundant during their proper season, and if that means orange juice in the morning and orange salad at the evening meal, why, that's fine and dandy! It would be hard to get too much citrus fruit into the diet.

Tangerines have a short season. They were a victory food special during the week just past, and there still are goodly supplies. But they'll be gone in a few more weeks, so make your tangerine salads now.

Oranges are even nicer for salads. Peel them and slice them crosswise, or separate them into segments and remove the membrane. Then combine them with any other fruits you can get hold of—sliced apples, perhaps, and grapes. Add a few walnut kernels if you like. Serve the salad on lettuce, watercress, or any other kind of greenery you like and can obtain from your favorite market.

While oranges are plentiful, use them frequently in salads such as this, with apples and nuts.

Tangerines won't be with us much longer, but they make pretty salads, too, on cranberry slices.

Here's an excellent dressing to serve with such a salad:

SWEET FRENCH DRESSING
(1⅓ cups)

½ cup lemon juice
½ cup salad oil
½ cup red jelly or honey
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon paprika

Shake well before serving.

That dressing is excellent on a combination of grapefruit and avocado, too. If you use it on sweeter fruits, cut down on the jelly or honey in the recipe.

Don't forget that citrus fruits can go into almost any kind of salad. They're good with greens alone or in combinations of meat or fish. When using tangerines in a salad, separate the segments and remove the seeds of the fruit.

Flotow—Diplomat Turned Composer

The operetta "Martha" will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air on Saturday, Jan. 23, from 8 to 9 p. m. (C. W. T.), on W-G-N and the Mutual network, starring Marion Claire, Eugene Conley, and Douglas Beattie.

FRIEDRICH VON FLOTOW, composer of the operetta "Martha," was trained for the diplomatic service, but a trip to Paris in 1827 when he was 22 years old convinced him that his future was in music. He visited Paris as a tourist on his first trip away from his native Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and there he met the musician-teacher Reicha, who became his first tutor.

He did not return to his own country for three years, as he stayed in Paris studying with Reicha. He was forced to leave Paris by the revolution of 1830, but soon returned to continue his studies and to make the city his artistic headquarters.

Von Flotow is noted in musical history as the composer of two great operettas, "Martha" and "Stradella." When he first returned to Paris after the revolution he started his work on "Stradella," but his first and very brief version, produced in 1837, was not the production that earned him his fame. His first success was won with "Le Naufrage de la Meduse," which was produced May 31, 1839, at the Theatre de la Renaissance in Paris. After a creditable run in Paris the operetta won further honors for the composer when it was produced in Germany as "Die Matrosen."

Following the success of his first operetta in Germany, Von Flotow revised and enlarged his "Stradella" and produced the work in Hamburg in 1844, where it proved to be a success. The operetta, however, when introduced in England two years later was a failure, and when Von Flotow tried to interest producers of Paris in the show they were not willing to take a chance on a production that failed in London.

When the producers of Paris refused to present "Stradella," Von Flotow left France for Venice, where he wrote and first introduced "Martha" in 1847. The operetta was rewritten from an earlier venture composed with Burgmuller and Deldevez in 1844. The book was based on a story by St. Georges and Friedrich, and altho the plot was weak, the music made the operetta a success—so successful, in fact, that it ran for two years in Italy. The operetta was first produced in London in 1858, and again it was a success. Translated into French, "Martha" was introduced in Paris the following year, but because of its English setting in plot and its buoyant music it was not appreciated by the French, who at that time were tired of lilting music and opposed to anything British.

Since then "Martha" has been presented all over the world in nine different languages.

NURSES ARE NEEDED!

1 With the army and navy requiring 3,000 graduate nurses every month, the need for student nurses has surged to the point that to meet the shortage 55,000 girls and women must enroll during the new school year. Susan Petty, 21, of Lebanon, Pa., is one of the thousands now taking training. A college graduate, she will spend only 27 months in school instead of the usual three years.

2 As a candidate for admission Susan takes many aptitude tests. Student nurses may be single or married, must be between 18 and 35 years of age, have at least a high school diploma.

3 Training is thoro and modern. In pediatrics classes the students learn to make toys as valuable as medicine and diet in curing children.

5 She must know, too, how to prepare the hypodermic. Graduate nurses supervise such experience.

"Bet your boots I'm early today, Alice, I've been washin' with MORE SUDS!"

says MRS. LENA MEES of Lodi, New Jersey

"Alice and me have a race every wash-day to see who gets their clothes on the line first. I sure beat her last Monday. All those extra suds knock the stuffing out of stubborn dirt. Better for soakin', too. They hold up so well, they keep soaked-out dirt from settlin' back on the clothes again."

GUESS we don't have to tell you experienced housewives what more suds and longer-lasting suds mean in your wash. For years, women have been sayin' they want more suds because such suds are harder-working. Saying they want longer-lasting suds because they do a better job of soaking and washing; because they save time and save soap. And now here's the kind of suds you've been asking for... more suds, richer suds, longer-lasting suds in the new sudsier Super Suds!

Easy as A-B-C, making the "milk-bottle suds test"

Just put two teaspoons of your present wash-day soap and a glass of water in a milk-bottle. Do the same with new sudsier Super Suds in another milk-bottle. Use any kind of water, even hard or cold water. Then shake 'em up. Just see if there aren't lots more suds in the Super Suds bottle and just see how long they last.

How Thirst Can Kill a Man

By JOHN A. MENAUGH

HUMAN privation and suffering are not confined to war times, altho it is out of war that have come countless true stories that tell of the courage and fortitude of men when confronted by death from thirst, starvation, or exposure.

Ever since men, long before the dawn of history, began braving the dangers of the sea the specter of death has been present there. With water all around them, men in uncounted numbers have died from thirst. Others have starved to death, still others have succumbed to exposure.

A surprising number, however, have endured beyond the commonly accepted limit of endurance and privation and have been saved when every link to life had been broken except only their will to live.

The present war, with its high proportion of ship disasters and airplane failures at sea, has produced many a heroic tale of men snatched from death. Adrift on life rafts or in open boats day after day, these men have been reclaimed, brought back to health, and saved for useful purposes of war or peace.

Take the case of the indestructible Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and his fellow airmen who were rescued from the Pacific, 600 miles north of Samoa, after having been adrift three weeks. Only one of the men with Rickenbacker, clinging to rubber life rafts in the hope of rescue, actually perished at sea—19 year old Sergt. Alexander T. Kaczmarczyk of Torrington, Conn. Fifty two year old Capt. Rickenbacker and his other companions survived the experience, subsisting on a few shriveled oranges, raw seagull flesh, raw fish, rain water, and dew.

Theirs was an experience not greatly unlike that of the famous Capt. William Bligh of H. M. S. Bounty and 18 members of his crew. Bligh and his men in 1787 were put adrift in an open boat by mutineers who had taken possession of the ship. They voyaged 4,000 miles in their fragile and overloaded craft before they reached the safety of Batavia in Java. Four thousand miles in an open boat, with only infrequent landings on remote islands to replenish their scanty food and water supplies, represented an experience cruel enough to try the courage of the most stout hearted of sailormen.

It must not be taken from the foregoing examples, however, that the sea possesses a monopoly of this sort of thing. The danger of death from thirst ever has been present on the trackless deserts and waterless plains. Starvation lurks in remote regions such as the frozen wastelands of the far north, the ice fields of the far south, and other barren areas. Starvation also has come time and again to people in primitive lands, killing by the thousands when crop failures have been followed by famine. Even when water is available to quench thirst and food is at hand to assuage hunger, exposure to extreme heat, sunlight, or cold may kill the luckless wanderer cut off from safety.

Of the three perils of thirst, hunger, and exposure the first in most cases is by far the quickest to deal out death. The reason for this is not difficult to explain.

The human body is composed largely of water, about two-thirds of its total weight being water. To maintain this balance it is necessary for a person to take water frequently. A high atmospheric temperature causes the body to perspire freely, and the water content thus is reduced more rapidly than on a cool day. It is essential in this situation to replenish water in the body more frequently.

Whenever the water content of the body falls below the average balance thirst sets in. Without water available the danger point is reached in relatively few hours. The maximum length of time that a healthy man can go without water in the sunshine in a warm, dry country is about three and a half days. In a cooler climate, where body evaporation is slower, the maximum may be extended a few hours, but not a great many.

About one-thirteenth the weight of the body represents blood. A man weighing 195 pounds would have about 15 pounds of blood, or about 15 pints. In the case of suffering from thirst the blood in the body is affected first. As the water content of the body is reduced the blood thickens. Eventually, if the condition continues, the blood becomes so thick that, altho it still will flow thru the larger blood vessels, it cannot be forced by the heart action thru the microscopic channels of the capillaries. This stoppage in the capillaries that normally supply blood to the brain causes delirium. Stoppage in the capillaries of the retina of the eye causes blindness. Delirium and blindness often are the forerunners of death by thirst.

One may wonder why sailors and others adrift at sea perish from thirst when there is water all around them. The explanation has to do largely with the fact that sea water has a high salt content. Blood normally contains solids, including salt. If one should drink water of exactly the same salt concentration as that of the blood nothing would happen and the water thus taken would satisfy. But when one, in delirium or otherwise under the stress of great thirst, actually drinks sea water he is inviting disaster. The salt of the sea water, being of a higher concentration than that of the blood, causes the water of the blood stream to leave the blood vessels in order to dilute the salt within the digestive tract. This deprives the blood of its fluidity. Unless the water balance of the body and the fluidity of the blood are restored within a reasonably short time death ensues. The eating of salty foods, as every one knows, causes one to drink copiously in order to restore a water balance. Were water or other thirst quenching liquid unavailable the blood stream in this case would have to yield water. Salty foods in no instance are as saline as sea water, yet the effect that they produce is similar, but in a much modified form, to that which follows the drinking of sea water.

CAPTAIN BLIGH

Sea water has a violent effect upon the digestive system. Being a strong laxative, it flushes the digestive tract. This further reduces the water content of the body and has the effect of intensifying the thirst. In other words, the more sea water one would drink the thirstier he would become. The infant who dies of cholera morbus perishes under circumstances identical with death by thirst. The frequent purgation caused by the disease deprives the child's tissues of water and thickens its blood. Alkaline water, such as found in desert sinks and lakes, affects the human body in the same manner as sea water, causing greater thirst and exhausting the body of its water content.

News dispatches describing ship sinkings have mentioned in numerous instances the presence of oil upon the water, from torpedoed tankers or from the fuel revervoirs of other vessels. This oil not only presents a great fire hazard, but it also menaces in another manner the lives of the ship survivors who are compelled to swim in it. If they drink it, as they frequently do while they struggle in the sea, it acts as a strong emetic and laxative and thus exhausts the body of its water content. Oil that is inhaled may cause what is known as oil pneumonia. It covers the lung tissues with a film that chokes off the oxygen.

In the drama of thirst nature is pitiless. Never has this been revealed more vividly than in the experience of a group of United States cavalrymen who went without water for 86 hours under the scorching sun of the Staked Plain of Texas.

It was on July 26, 1877, that a Capt. Nolan of Company A, 10th cavalry, with 27 troopers set out from the shores of Double lakes to follow the trail of marauding Indians. The soldiers had filled their canteens with water at the lakes, expecting to reach a new water supply soon. The water of the canteens was used up quickly, and when night came the scouting party found itself in an unfamiliar spot with no fresh water available for men, horses, or mules. What water was discovered in a little pond called Dry lake was too alkaline to drink.

The story of the suffering of this band of men in one of the most arid areas of the whole United States has been told in a little booklet by Capt. J. H. T. King, at that time post surgeon of Fort Concho, Texas, who was a member of the relief party sent out to succor Capt. Nolan and his soldiers.

For four nights and nearly four days Nolan's party staggered over the plain in the search of water. Among the less revolting devices resorted to by the men to quench their thirst was the drinking of horses' blood. But this only made them ill. The sufferers' mouths and throats were parched, their tongues became swollen, and they no longer could swallow the scanty food with which they were provided. Even their fingers and hands shriveled from the great reduction of the water contents of their bodies. When finally the men reached water it was found that two of the band had perished and two were missing. The horses had been affected in much the same manner as the men, and a number of them had died, yet, curiously enough, the mules came thru comparatively unfatigued. They had cropped the dry grass found in spots along the trail and had been able to chew and swallow it without effort.

These soldiers, it should be borne in mind, were men used to hardships, were accustomed to long rides under the burning rays of the sun, and were better equipped physically perhaps than most other folks to go without water for a long period. Since they were soldiers, it may be assumed that a majority of them at least were comparatively young men. Almost any one would agree that in a situation such as this their youth would be in their favor. Yet youth, strange to say, does not appear to be a requisite for endurance against prolonged thirst. As a matter of fact, as has been shown in the survival of 52 year old Capt. Rickenbacker and the death of his 19 year old companion, the older man, where everything else is equal, may actually have a better chance than a younger one to come thru an experience of extreme thirst.

The older man, providing he is in good health, is slower to react. That is, his tissues are slower to react to the demands of thirst, and consequently his body is exhausted of water at a slower rate than is that of a younger man. It is difficult, however, to establish an age rule for thirst endurance, inasmuch

MOSTLY ABOUT DOGS

By BOB BECKER

THE American public may change its mind about the kinds of medium or small sized dogs that it prefers from decade to decade or even from year to year, but the setters seem to go on forever—always high in favor among both sportsmen and other dog fanciers who like the temperament and the beauty of the English, Gordon, and Irish setters. Altho the Gordon setter is not extremely popular in this country, its relatives, the beautiful English and the stunning Irish setters, are familiar dogs in the shows, in the hunting fields, and in homes.

This pair of Irish setters, owned by Emily Schweitzer, Northbrook, Ill., have not only beauty but brains. They are the first Irish setters ever to win their utility dog title in this country. The dog on the right is the international champion Verbu Norna Oogh. The other is her daughter, named Verbu Susie Oogh.

Used for many decades as a herding dog in Europe, the big Great Pyrenees has been winning many friends in this country in recent years. Several have been turned over to the army to be trained for war work. This specimen is Champion Combermere Capitan, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Bruce C. Layman, Waynesboro, Pa.

To any one who has looked into the history of some of our breeds it's not surprising that there is quite a difference between the temperament of the Irish and English setters. Even the Irish Setter Club of America likes to point out in its official discussion of the breed that the "red dog" is "typically Irish," with a certain something about him that not only makes him very likable but also adds to his value as a bird dog.

There isn't much doubt about this characterization. The Irish setter has a lot of sparkle. He's bold, flashy, and commands attention. He's a gay dog if there ever was one. It's a case of personality plus beauty, confidence, and brains—a real combination in any dog.

The color of the Irish setter should be a rich golden chestnut or mahogany red, with no trace of black. White on the chest, throat, or toes, a small star on the forehead, or a narrow streak of black on the nose does not disqualify an Irish setter in the ring. This is fair enough, because in the inherited characteristics of this beautiful setter is the tendency for a little white to appear.

Such a situation is inevitable when you consider that as late as 1857 Youatt pointed out that the Irish setters of that day were either very red, or red and white, or lemon colored, or white "patched with deep chestnut." He adds that the Irish sportsmen insisted that it was necessary for the Irish setters to "have a black nose and the black roof to the mouth. This peculiar dye is supposed to be necessary to a good and genuine Irish setter."

Down the years breeders have been eliminating these color mixtures and have produced a solid-colored dog of great beauty.

Hardy, long-lived, and with a merry outlook on life, an Irish setter makes an interesting companion dog. His great beauty, spirit, and personality, however, have made him an outstanding show dog, and quite a few kennels have been breeding Irish setters for the bench only. They have forgotten that the red dog is a field dog and always has been a field dog, and that this ability should not be sacrificed. Fortunately, there has been a revival in the Irish setter as a bird dog and breeders are doing a better job in producing specimens that can hunt and win on the bench, too.

For many years we have had at least one hunting trip over an Irish setter. As a rule these delightful field trips with the red dogs have occurred in Wisconsin or South Dakota. Last fall we again walked behind a stylish, bird-finding Irish setter that had mastered the tricks of pheasants. The work of this good looking dog was a perfect demonstration of the natural ability of the Irish setter as a bird dog.

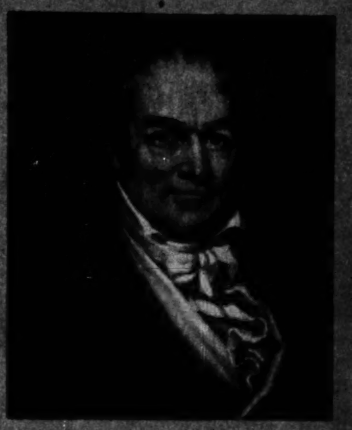
DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS

This is another in a series of biographical sketches of America's historical celebrities appearing every week in the Graphic Section. The illustrations are taken from a famous work, "The National Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Americans," published in 1865.



WILLIAM HARRIS CRAWFORD, statesman, diplomat, and Presidential candidate, was born on Feb. 24, 1772, in Virginia—some biographers saying in Nelson county, others in Amherst county. In his early boyhood his family moved to South Carolina and later to what is now Columbia county, Georgia, where William grew to manhood.

His formal education was meager, but his desire for knowledge caused him to study a great deal at home, and while still relatively young he began teaching school. From the principalship of an academy in Augusta, Ga., he turned to law, and in 1798 he was admitted to the bar. Marrying Susan Girardin in 1804, he built a home (Woodlawn) near the village of Lexington, Ga., where he passed the remainder of his life when not absent on legal or public duties.

In the meantime, however, he had attracted attention by his activities in politics, which in those early days afforded a highly colorful and sometimes dangerous career. As a result of a political quarrel he killed Peter L. Van Allen in a duel in 1802. The following year he was elected to the state legislature, and in 1806 he was permanently crippled in the left wrist in a duel with John Clark.

In 1807 Crawford was elected to the United States senate to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Abraham Baldwin. As a senator he displayed marked independence, frequently opposing measures advocated by his own party. When Vice President George Clinton died Crawford was elected president pro tempore of the senate, and in 1813 he accepted an appointment as United States minister to France.

Resigning from this diplomatic post in 1815, he was on his way back to America when President Madison named him secretary of war. In his second year in this cabinet position he served also as secretary of the treasury. The last-named post he continued to hold until 1825.

Already he had come to be talked of as Presidential timber. Altho he personally refused to oppose James Monroe in 1816, the congressional caucus that named the candidate cast 54 votes for him, as against 65 for Monroe.

The Presidency was won by Monroe in 1816 and again in 1820, and Crawford loomed as a strong candidate for the election of 1824. In the autumn of 1823, however, he was stricken with paralysis, and altho his friends sent out favorable reports concerning his health, his campaign for nomination suffered. At the congressional caucus called in February, 1824, to select a candidate only 66 party members (Republican-Democratic) of a total of 216 appeared. All but two of the 66 voted for Crawford. The three other candidates in the field were Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, and Henry Clay. In the election Jackson got 99 electoral votes, Adams 84, Crawford 41, and Clay 37. Since none received a majority of the votes, which was necessary at that time, the election was thrown into the house of representatives, where Clay employed his influence to elect Adams.

Crawford's remaining years were unhappy ones. He recovered sufficiently by 1827 to accept a circuit judgeship, but he still entertained ambitions to move into the White House.

He died in Elberton, Ga., Sept. 15, 1834.

THIRST

as so much depends upon the physical condition of the individual in each case.

While it takes longer for a person to starve to death than to die of thirst, starvation is attended by suffering equally as intense. An average man in good health can survive without food for about 30 days, provided he has plenty of water and does not exert himself. The more he works under circumstances of this kind the quicker he will die. In starvation the body actually consumes itself in part. It lives as long as nature will allow upon its own tissues, drawing upon excess nutriment wherever it is stored. Excess fat disappears first. The fat man therefore can last a little longer than the thin one, provided, of course, he does not exert himself.

The history of the vast movement of pioneers across the continent in covered wagon days provides countless examples of death from starvation. Along the faint wagon-rut trails followed by the emigrants were graves and more graves and the bleaching bones of oxen and horses. Disease, drownings, and Indian arrows accounted for no few of these hardy pioneers, but it was thirst that caught them on the so-called dry drives and starvation that overtook them when their wagons broke down, their food supplies were exhausted, or they were trapped by the deep snow in the mountain passes.

Of many who perished thus there remain no records, but the account of the Donner party in 1846 and 1847 is sufficient to satisfy any morbid yearnings for harrowing details of a ghastly episode. The story of this experience, which has been told so accurately and so vividly in George R. Stewart's book, "Ordeal by Hunger," sets a record for human suffering.

A group of families headed by George Donner and his brother Jacob, both of Springfield, Ill., was crossing the continent in the summer of 1846, bound for California. Heeding bad advice the Donner party separated from a large emigrant train to follow a short cut that would take them south of Great Salt lake.

Misfortune dogged these unfortunates all the way after they had abandoned the better known trail. First it was dissension among members of the party, then it was thirst on the dry drives, and finally, when they were trapped by snow in the mountains near what now is Donner lake, just north of Lake Tahoe, it was starvation that overtook them. They ate the oxen and horses that they had managed to bring that far with them. They ate their dogs. They ate the hides of the animals and boiled their bones to make soup. Finally they were driven to cannibalism.

The story is one of courage and sacrifice in the face of disheartening difficulties, but woven in its fabric is a thread or two of selfishness and greed. Most of the members of the party reacted as heroes should. A few of the weaker souls, as generally is the case, lacked moral fiber for true hero parts.

Rescue parties from the coast broke thru the mountains to the survivors in the spring of 1847. Of the original 87 members of the Donner party only 47 came out alive.

With sufficient food and water the human machine in most cases can function under the most trying circumstances. With his body well nourished and his mental processes keen, man is resourceful and in nearly all instances can withstand the worst that nature deals out. There are occasions, however, when exposure may prove fatal.

Exposure to the hot sun may kill quickly, especially in tropical countries, if precautions are not taken. Body evaporation is rapid under strong sun rays and too much evaporation will bring sudden illness. Sunstroke or heatstroke is different from heat prostration. In the first the body temperature rises to 106 to 110 degrees. One hundred ten degrees is about the limit of human endurance, and it cannot last long or the victim will die. Sunstroke never occurs except actually under the rays of the sun. It is the rays themselves, which have great penetration and affect the nervous system, that knock a man out. Any exertion hastens a sunstroke.

Heat prostration, on the other hand, may occur when the victim is in the shade and is not exerting himself. In heat prostration the body temperature rarely rises to above 101 or 102 degrees. The sufferer's skin feels cold and clammy to him.

In exposure at sea there is another factor to be considered. This is sea water, which, as previously explained, is so apt to cause death if taken internally. A ship survivor afloat on a raft frequently is soaked in salt water, which irritates the skin and causes it to break out in painful sores. Many who have died at sea have been victims of thirst, starvation, and exposure to sunlight and sea water all at the same time.

Altho heat may kill in average cases more quickly than cold, the latter is not to be regarded lightly. Wherever possible the person subjected to extreme cold should keep moving in order to stimulate the circulation of the blood. If he gives up and lies down, overcome by drowsiness, he is lost, otherwise he may come thru the ordeal with nothing worse than frostbitten extremities. These in themselves are painful but not fatal unless widespread infection follows.

In many historic examples of deaths from exposure to the cold, such as the fatalities among Napoleon's troops on their grim retreat from Moscow, other factors have been present—starvation, disease, and injuries.

STARS IN COLOR

SUSAN PETERS is currently appearing in "Assignment in Brittany" and "Gentle Annie," but probably more people know her because of her work in "Random Harvest," with Ronald Colman and Greer Garson. She was born in Spokane, Wash., but reared in Hollywood, where she studied dramatics. She's 5 feet 4½ inches tall, weighs 104 pounds. Her real name is Suzanne Carnahan.

RED SKELTON was born into a circus family in Vincennes, Ind., and has been in show business all his life. His father was a clown in the '90s, and Red, thwarted in his ambition to be a lion tamer, went into medicine shows, river boat stock, vaudeville, and finally the movies. Red is 6 feet 2 and weighs 190 pounds.

RITA HAYWORTH is 24 years old, but a veteran of more than 30 movies, in addition to 10 years of professional dancing. Her father, Eduardo Cansino, was a variety dancer, and Rita joined the family troupe at 6. Her first thrill came when a month booking at Agua Caliente, Mexico, stretched out to two years. The movies didn't give her a real break until 1941, but now she's a star, as "You Were Never Lovelier" proves. Rita's 5 feet 5, weighs 118 pounds.

KNOW YOUR CAMERA

The expression is the main thing in any portrait; technical considerations come second. This picture has such faults as a beam of light striking neck and jacket, thus distracting somewhat from the face, yet in spite of this it is an unusually pleasing portrait.

Don't crowd your portrait subject by too close cropping, and don't place the head in the center of the picture. It is best to have the subject turn her head slightly and to leave more space on the side toward which she is looking. (Posed by Loretta Young.)

PORTRAIT photography is booming. Millions of service men want their pictures taken in uniform, and millions of relatives and friends want photographs of themselves to give these men. Thousands of amateurs have been asked to take such pictures, which are vital for wartime morale, but not all of them could "deliver the goods," because they did not follow the rules of portraiture.

There are quite a few time-honored rules in photographic portraiture. You may not be creating great works of art by observing them, but you will have a certain amount of guarantee that the portraits you take will be at least presentable. Some of these rules deal with elementary composition of pictures; others are rules of photographic technique.

Naturally the subject of a portrait should appear large in the picture. But this does not mean that the head alone should fill the entire picture space. Don't crowd your subject, but leave some amount of space all around. This space should not be evenly divided, placing the subject in the center of the picture. Have the subject always slightly off center. At the same time the subject should not face the camera squarely (unless you are making an identification picture), but the head should be turned at least slightly to one side.

Leave more empty space on the side toward which the subject is looking. If there is little space above the head the subject will appear tall, while a lot of space will make your subject seem smaller. This is true even where you don't show the full figure.

It is best to shoot all portraits against a plain background. Furniture, loud wall paper, or wooden moldings always constitute disturbing elements. Avoid accessories such as lamps, vases, pictures, flowers, etc., when taking head and shoulder shots. It is best to pose the model seated on a piano bench or other support which is not visible in the picture. Accessories can be successfully used in full-length portraits which otherwise would appear bare and posy. They also have a definite place in informal portraits in which you show the subject doing something.

Pose your subject and direct your lights in such a manner that the face receives immediate attention in the finished picture. Careful lighting is the most important means of achieving this end. On the other hand, watch out so that you don't overexpose the brightly illuminated face. Overexposed portraits show "washed out" spots on cheeks, nose, and forehead, where most of the light has fallen.

If your model wears light clothes it won't be difficult to give both the face and the clothing correct exposure. If the clothes are dark you will have to throw additional light on them to show properly exposed detail in both face and clothes.

Nothing is more annoying than a portrait in which parts of the subject fade into the background. Pose your subject three to five feet from the background. Use a light background for dark hair, and vice versa. Usually you get good separation between model and background if you place a light behind the model. It can be turned toward the background to lighten it, or it can be directed toward the model, giving a so-called rim light effect.

Don't photograph people with prominent noses and double chins in profile. Such an angle lifts out these features instead of subduing them. By turning such models toward the camera you place less emphasis on the nose, and by shooting from a relatively high angle you can make the double chin disappear. This is especially true if you place your lights high so that the double chin will be shaded and will be therefore underexposed in the picture.

Just the opposite technique should be followed with people having outstanding ears. In a head-on picture the ears will be clearly visible against the background, while they will not be prominent if the face is turned to one side and the light allowed to fade off into shade toward the back of the head. Men are usually photographed with the part of the hair turned toward the camera.

Bald heads become less noticeable if photographed from a low angle so that only a little is seen above the forehead. A low placement of lights will also aid this effect. Such a light placement is also advisable when the model wears a hat or cap which would cast shadows over part of the face. The shadows covering deep-set eyes can be eliminated by placing the lights low.

Important as these minor tricks are, the main thing to remember when making a portrait is to get a pleasing and natural expression.

In Hair-Do's It's the Center Part!

By ANTOINETTE DONNELLY

The ESCAPE coiffure—illustrating in the original sculptor's model and in its final development a perfect design for evening.

(Copyright: 1943: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.)

PERHAPS the only really new note in hairdressing news is the center part. We have come to think of it as being the exclusive right of a stunning brunette whose hair ends in a chignon on the nape of the neck. This style of hair-do on the type mentioned is as undated and as enduringly lovely as a rare jewel.

But the brunettes no longer have exclusive rights, it seems. Women who never before wore a center part are doing it now and finding it excellent for the shape of their faces. They're wearing it not only definitely center-parted but with a definitely flattened effect; the whole front head width waved therefrom, if you please. As opposed to the high front pompadour, the effect is a bit startling, but tremendously becoming, and young, too, in spite of the unfounded rumors that a center part lends age.

The center part inspiration, the Victorian coiffure, comes from one of our great hair designers whose studio is an eye opener to persons who think new hair styles are arrived at by hit-and-miss process. The designer of whom we speak is a sculptor with a passion for sculpturing women's heads with the perfect coiffure in mind. In clay busts you will find his creations. In an enormous bas-relief in his studio you'll find many heads and profiles under the maestro's treatment.

He will decide upon a typical personality, the average type of woman who represents the average shopper, and he'll create a coiffure just for her. He'll see a woman under glamorous evening circumstances, a woman at the cocktail hour, a girl on her way to and from business, and his clever hands will execute a masterly piece of work.

If it is an upswept style, as illustrated in the escape coiffure, you see beautiful hair movement, as it is termed—waves upon waves in large, soft lines. This the maestro believes is the perfect evening coiffure for that special evening.

In your cocktail coiffure of waves, soft curls, and side parting you have a round-the-clock hair-do, most becomingly worn with the part uniform caps for women serving.

The COCKTAIL—a versatile hair-do of waves and soft curls that does around-the-clock duty and is especially becoming with uniform caps.

ACE OVER GUADALCANAL!

The planes were closer now. Smith's jaw hardened. He was only 50 feet behind the near plane when he gave it the works.

Tracers bored into the wing tanks and cockpit. The plane—a Zero—went into a steep whistling dive and crashed in the sea. The pilot of the second Zero, looking back, climbed out of danger in a frenzied burst of power.

The brusque commander of Fighting 23 had fallen in with the enemy by mistake, but it was an error quickly corrected. It had permitted him to rack up a total of four Japs in less than 15 minutes—just a few of the 19 victories at Guadalcanal which establish him as one of America's ranking aces of the war.

Altogether, in a month and a half, Fighting 23 blasted 95 Japs out of the sky. And its cool, fearless leader became known thruout the South Pacific as "the fightinest fool of them all."

Adm. Chester Nimitz recognized these achievements when he stopped at the island on an inspection trip. Maj. Smith stood nonchalantly, wearing a baseball cap on his head, when the admiral pinned a navy cross on his rumpled shirt.

In the tropics baseball caps are regulation issue for flyers' ground wear. Light and convenient, they keep the fierce sun from one's eyes. Fighting 23 supplied blue caps for its pilots and red for gunners.

Baseball—and football, too—were favorite sports with plain John Smith when he was a schoolboy not so long ago at Lexington, Okla. Now 27, he still bears a facial scar which resulted from a collision with a fence when he was playing football at the age of 5.

He was graduated from the University of Oklahoma in 1936 and joined the marine corps at once. Two years later he was able to get into the flying school at Pensacola.

Late in 1941 he was in a dive bomber squadron. When war began he was shifted to a fighter squadron assigned to relieve the gallant defenders of Wake Island. But the United States carrier assigned to the task could not reach its objective in time and was pulled back to Midway. In the spring he was ordered to Pearl Harbor to organize Fighting 23.

First as a captain and later as major, the Oklahoman showed his men the way by himself doing—and doing better—the things he asked of them. He was the first to shoot down an enemy plane at Guadalcanal.

The myth of the Zero had reached its peak when Fighting 23 arrived at Henderson field. United States airmen, who still respect the Zero for its speed, sleekness and climbing ability, regarded it still more highly then.

But on his first patrol sweep over Savo Island, the day after the squadron's arrival, Smith unhesitatingly led four Grummans against six Zeros.

Sweeping along at 8,000 feet, he looked up and saw the Zeros diving to attack from 10,000 feet.

He swerved the squadron to meet the challenge. The first Zero swooped at Smith, guns spitting, but missed. When the next one arrived he was prepared. He rolled and caught its belly in his sight. In a precise pattern his bullets ripped into the Jap fuselage. For a moment nothing happened except the steady punching of holes. Then the Zero split apart with a black effusion of heavy smoke, like a dry puffball that has been trod on.

Here was victim No. 1. Smith—he was a captain then—could not define his feelings as he watched the Jap spiral down and explode on the beach of Savo Island.

"All I did was shoot at him," he told himself. "I'm not thrilled, and I'm not proud of myself. I just did a job."

That first test of strength above Savo turned out to be a draw for all practical purposes. The Japs lost a plane and a pilot. The Americans lost a precious plane, but the pilot, tho injured, was saved.

Hard fighting marines on the ground, grimy and bearded, swore by Smith, and he returned their respect.

"This fighting is like a football game," he pointed out at every opportunity. "We have to have teamwork to get anywhere. The flyers are like the back field men—they get to put on lots of speed and flash and show. The boys on the ground are linemen—they don't get much of a chance to put on show. But in their way they do a much finer job than we ever did and take more punishment."

The marine ground forces on Guadalcanal kept daily score on the running contest between Maj. Smith and Capt. Marion E. Carl, also of Fighting 23. Carl, a fresh-faced Oregon youth who joined the marine corps in 1939 and had shot down one Jap at Midway before the squadron left for the Solomons, never quite caught up with his commander. When Fighting 23 was relieved he was three planes behind Smith's 19. And he was thoroly disgusted with himself.

One day in the heat of this competition Carl was shot down. For five days his loss was mourned loudly by the marines. Then he walked out of the jungle.

It developed that he had bailed out near an island and had found a native in an old motorboat. Nursing this frail craft along, they had got back to the small section of Guadalcanal then occupied by Americans.

"How many has Smitty got now?" was his first question. He shrieked despairingly when told Smith was three ahead with 14 victims. And it was one of the classics of the war when he made a special trip to ask the commanding general to ground Smith for five days.

"It isn't fair, general," he complained. "How can I catch up with him now?"

But Smith himself was due for his share of bad luck. It happened one day when a Jap force flew out of the sun and surprised the squadron.

In the first moment two marine fighters went spinning down in flames. Tangling with three Zeros, Smith managed to explode one with clean hits. But the other two got on his tail and sent cannon shells into his wings and oil carburetor. He was forced down.

As he glided to a bumpy landing in a rough clearing he fixed the terrain in his memory, for the clearing was six miles inside Jap held territory. Capt. Carl protected the landing by coming in low, ready to strafe casual enemy patrols that might rush the plane. But the Japs were apparently elsewhere that day.

Maj. Smith struck out in the direction of Henderson field, setting a straight course thru the woods. "I didn't see a Jap," he said months later when he visited Chicago. "It was just like taking a hike. There were a few rivers to ford, of course. The whole trip took me just 2½ hours."

Halfway back he found a wrecked American plane on a hillside. Despite the danger of Jap patrols he spent 15 minutes sifting thru the heap of disintegrated metal, hoping to find a number that would identify the wreckage.

He suspected that the plane might have been Scotty McLennan's. Lt. Noyes McLennan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald R. McLennan of Lake Forest, Ill., had dropped out of formation after a fight in September. He was last seen waving good-by as he dropped headlong toward the hills. A two year veteran of the marines, he was 23 years old and was credited with downing seven Jap planes.

But there were no identifying marks left on the shattered plane to establish that it might have been McLennan's, or even from Fighting 23, for that matter. The propeller established that it was an American plane.

Unlike a star baseball pitcher, who might work only on Sundays, Maj. Smith went into action every day with his men. There was no rest for the marines' first air support on Guadalcanal.

Every day Jap bombers and Zeros would come over—usually at the stroke of 10 in the morning. Smith and his men would try to be lurking up in the sun, waiting for the enemy to show.

By the middle of September Smith's toll of enemy planes had risen to 12. Including his bag, the squadron had accounted for 51 bombers and Zeros. These were victims actually seen to crash—they didn't bother about counting probables.

This was a gallant and merry life at first, but as days passed and enemy planes continued to come over with undiminished regularity, the squadron commander and his men became grim and hard.

In the air there is no mercy, no compassion. The enemy is the enemy, and it is either kill or be killed.

Maj. Smith never had any illusions about himself. When this ace of World War II. saw himself referred to as a hero he protested.

"I've had plenty of luck," he explained gravely. "It just happened that my bullets got in there first. Other fellows just as good as I am got shot down, maybe, on their first trip out.

"When you find the enemy and get him in your sights, there's only one thing you can do. You let him have it. This is something that any schoolboy could do."

Despite these earnest disclaimers, America has taken the straight shooting major to its heart as a hero, and there is little he can do about it.

Brought back to this country to tell the thrilling story of his battles to the men who will go into action soon, he would rather be back on the firing line himself. He can't forget the glorious days on Guadalcanal . . . days such as the squadron's farewell appearance, in which it shot down 9 Japs out of a formation of 15.

That was a good ending to Fighting 23's saga of the Solomons. A Jap fleet was moving to attack Guadalcanal. The squadron, now relieved by fresh men and planes, was ordered to protect formations of torpedo planes and dive bombers as they assaulted the enemy fleet.

The squadron closely followed the torpedo planes as they skimmed the waves north of the island, seeking the Jap ships. From above a guardian mission of 15 Zero float planes saw them and dropped down in a savage attack, mistaking the Grummans for torpedo bombers, which are easy prey.

Out ahead with his ship, Maj. Smith gleefully noted this error and gave orders to capitalize on it. The Grummans split away from the formation and roared upward. Realizing his mistake then, the Jap leader turned his planes away, foolishly exposing the vulnerable bellies of the Zeros to accurate American fire.

"Squadron 23," Smith rasped into his microphone, "pick your targets and give them something to remember our last day."

The squadron swept thru the enemy formation like a hurricane thru dry leaves. Nine of the 15 Zeros plummeted burning toward the sea below. The torpedo planes and dive bombers pressed on to execute their mission successfully. It was a fine day for Maj. Smith and his boys of Fighting 23.

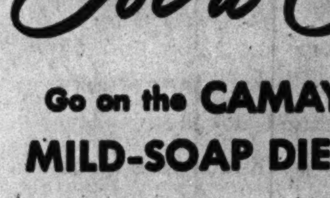
A LOVELIER skin may soon be yours! Follow the example of this charming bride, Mrs. R. C. Schindler of New York City. She says: "The Camay Mild-Soap Diet has done wonders for my skin."

You may be cleansing your skin improperly, or using a soap not mild enough. Skin specialists advise regular cleansing with a fine, mild soap. That's why we say change to a Mild-Soap Diet using this milder Camay. For Camay is milder than dozens of popular beauty soaps. Do this—and new loveliness may soon be yours.

Start the Camay Mild-Soap Diet Tonight



Work Camay's lather over your skin, paying special attention to nose, base of nostrils and chin. Rinse with warm water and if skin is oily, follow with 30 seconds of cold splashings.

In the morning—one more session with this milder Camay and your skin is ready for make-up. Remember—keep it up day after day—it's the regularity that counts!

FEEL FIT AS A FIDDLE

Tomorrow

TAKE PHILLIPS'
MILK OF MAGNESIA
Tonight

SAY GOODBYE to those "morning blues." Next time you overeat, or stay up late at a gay party, take Phillips' Milk of Magnesia at bedtime and wake up feeling "fit as a fiddle". That's because Phillips' does more than merely neutralize excess acidity—it finishes the job. After settling the stomach, it goes on to act as a very gentle laxative—promotes a mild yet thorough elimination. It's an ideal laxative-antacid. Read directions on package and take as directed thereon or as prescribed by your physician.

ONE-TWO ACTION

1 NEUTRALIZES EXCESS STOMACH ACIDS—and does it almost quicker than it takes to tell. Relieves that uneasy feeling of discomfort almost immediately.

2 ACTS AS MILD LAXATIVE. Gentle—does not upset the system and leave you feeling "all wrung out". Take any time—does not act with embarrassing urgency.

UPSIDE DOWN BIRDS

THE wind blew from the North and big snowflakes tumbled down and piled up into drifts beneath the rosebush where the Teenie Weenie village stood. In the morning when the little folk crawled out of their tiny beds they found the old shoe, in which most of them lived, nearly covered with snow.

"This is going to be hard on the birds," said the General, as he watched several of the Teenie Weenie men shovel the snow off the front porch with their tiny snow shovels. "This snow will cover all the ground, and the birds won't be able to find anything to eat."

"I'll put on a kettle of corn and boil it so we can give hot food to any bird that may come around," said the Cook.

"You had better cook a thimbleful of wheat, too," said the Lady of Fashion, "for there will be plenty of hungry birds around here pretty soon."

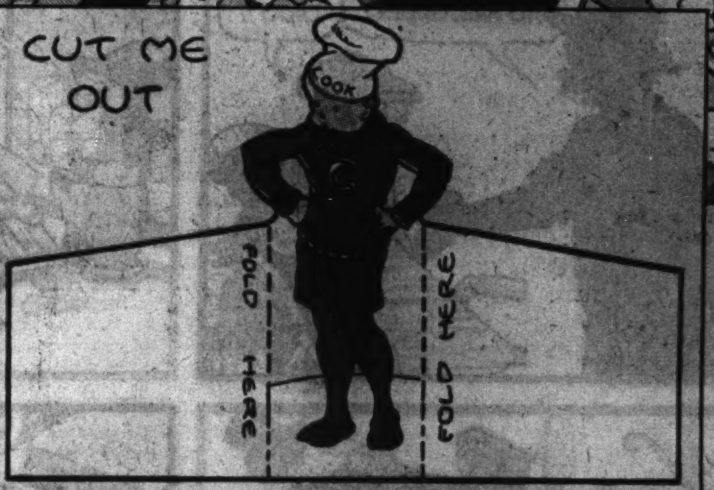
The Cook went out into the kitchen and put his biggest kettle on the Teenie Weenie stove. (This kettle had formerly been the metal top of a catsup bottle.) After he had half filled it with water he added several grains of corn.

"Maybe I had better cook some wheat, too," he decided, as he glanced over the top of a snowdrift that was fast covering the kitchen window.

The Teenie Weenies are very friendly with the birds that live near the rosebush. Every Winter when snow covers the ground and the birds cannot find food, the Teenie Weenies see that their feathered neighbors have something to eat.

While the Teenie Weenies were eating their breakfast several sparrows flew under the rosebush and settled on the ground in front of the shoe house. The Cook and Gogo carried out a thimbleful of warm cooked corn and the birds eagerly gobbled it up. A thimble of wheat went the same way, for there were many hungry birds to be fed. The Cook and Gogo worked all day cooking corn and wheat. Of course, they couldn't cook enough to give the birds all they could eat, but they did see that each bird got a little snack to keep him warm and cheerful.

All sorts of birds came for food. There were several tree sparrows, three chickadees, a cedar waxwing, two brown creepers and two white-breasted nuthatches. The Teenie Weenies enjoyed watching the birds, and they were especially interested in the nuthatches. The little people had named them the "upside down birds," because the nuthatches can run along the bottom side of a tree limb just as easily as they can walk on the top side.



TEENIE WEENIES

BY WM. DONAHEY

Nuthatches live mostly on spider eggs and bugs, and the Cook prepared special food for them. He cooked some wheat and added several large chunks of frog ham, and the birds, who were a young married couple, ate every last speck.

The Lady of Fashion tried to strike up a conversation with Mrs. Nuthatch, who sat on the top of the front porch. But she was quite shy and had very little to say, although she did thank the Teenie Weenies for their kindness in a very short and pretty speech.

The Teenie Weenies fed the birds for several days. The Cook and Gogo were kept busy most of the time preparing food, and they used a great deal of the Teenie Weenies' Winter supply of grain, but the little people had stored a large amount during the Summer and they were mighty glad to share it with the hungry birds.

Susan Huntington, Air Cadet Stevens Married in Alabama

Just as this page about Susan's and Warren's engagement was going to press—they were married! Like so many girls engaged to army men these days, Susan's wedding plans were changed almost overnight.

HER RING—is beautifully set with an emerald shining either side of the exquisite diamond.

She's ENGAGED!

She's Lovely! She uses Pond's!

SUSAN TUCKER HUNTINGTON of New Canaan and New York

Her engagement to Aviation Cadet Warren Albert Stevens was announced September 9th while he was on his last leave.

Warren is "South" now—in training as an Army flyer, and Susan is hard at work at the Delehanty Institute taking the course in "Assembly and Inspection" so she'll be ready to step right into a vital job on an airplane production line.

"My face gets good and grimy while I'm working," says Susan—"so I'm being extra fussy about getting my skin extra clean. Pond's Cold Cream helps slick off every speck of machine dirt and grease—and afterwards my face feels soft as a glamour girl's."

She smooths Pond's all over her face and throat. Pats gently, but briskly to soften and release dirt and make-up. Then tissues off well. Next, she "rinses" with more Pond's. Tissues off again. "My face feels so soft—and so extra clean," she says.

Do this yourself—every night and for daytime clean-ups. You'll see why war-busy society women like Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., praise Pond's—why more women use it than any other face cream. Ask for the larger sizes—you get even more for your money. All sizes popular in price. At beauty counters everywhere.

FOR ENGAGED HANDS—
—the lovely new Pond's Lotion
(Danya)
Pearl-glowing creaminess blended to:
- soften hands in one application
- give busy hands a whiter, sweeter look
- relieve irritated chapping quickly

LEARNING TO DO A JOB THE U. S. NEEDS—At her bench at the Delehanty Institute, Susan drills precisely accurate holes in metal castings—a process she'll use often when she starts her war job. "Warren would be surprised if he could see how mechanically exact I'm getting to be," she says.

He is training to fly army planes...she is training to help build them

"SHALL I SEND HIM YOUR LOVE, TOO?" Susan asks Jupiter. After a grimy day in the school shop, it's wonderful to feel frilly and feminine again, and Susan, in her sweet pink negligee, is completely bewitching—with her big dark eyes, and flower-lovely Pond's complexion.

SEE G.O.P. GAIN IN SOUTHWEST COUNCIL VOTE

Predict Hot Fights in Four Wards.

BY HAROLD SMITH.

Strong likelihood that the single Republican council seat on the southwest side will be increased to five in the coming aldermanic elections was seen by G. O. P. leaders last week.

Largely ignoring the fiction that aldermanic elections are nonpartisan, the party organizations in several wards are preparing for a finish fight in the elections Feb. 23 or the runoffs April 3. The hottest southwest side contests seemed in prospect for the 3d, 17th, 18th, and 19th wards. The 9th is expected to stay in Republican hands, the Democrats having decided against backing competition against Ald. Arthur G. Lindell.

De Priest Enters Race.

In the 3d, former Congressman Oscar De Priest, the G. O. P. ward committee man, entered the fight against the Democratic incumbent, Benjamin A. Grant. The city hall organization, headed by County Commissioner Edward M. Sneed, has indorsed Ald. Grant.

In the 17th the main fight is expected to be between Ald. William T. Murphy, also Democratic ward committee man, and Clifford L. Hazzard, choice of the G. O. P. organization headed by Henry D. Lindblad, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for city clerk. This ward went for Green for mayor in 1939, for Green for governor a year later, and for Brooks for senator last November.

The 18th ward Democrats have indorsed Ald. Bernard O'Hallaren for a second term. The Republicans have lined up behind William Morgensen, accountant and secretary of the ward organization for the last ten years. The 18th gave majorities to Green in 1940 and Brooks last year.

Carlson vs. Duffy in 19th.

In the 19th ward, which has gone Republican in every general and mayoral election since 1936, the G. O. P. committee man, Harry A. Carlson, is the principal opponent thus far for Ald. John J. Duffy, Democratic second termer.

Following are sketches of the southwest side wards, telling something of their makeup and political history:

THIRD—Negroes are in the majority in this ward, one of the fastest growing wards in the city. It had 75,028 inhabitants in 1940, as compared with 65,916 10 years earlier. Robert R. Jackson, a Negro, was the alderman for 22 years until 1939, when former Congressman Oscar De Priest eliminated him from the runoff, in which De Priest lost to a white man, Benjamin A. Grant.

NINTH—With its 14.5 square miles, this is one of the largest wards in the city, yet its population shrank to 73,240 in 1940 from 78,552 ten years earlier. It is an industrial ward, its largest factory being the Pullman plant. Ald. Arthur C. Lindell, ending his third term, is one of the few Republicans in the council. Sheldon W. Govier, clerk of the appellate court, is Democratic ward committman. John C. Fiddelke is the G. O. P. committeeman. The 9th went to Green in the 1939 mayoral election and in the gubernatorial contest a year later and for Senator Brooks last November.

ELEVENTH—Largely industrial, the 11th ward has a shrinking population, composed mostly of thrifty, solid families of German or Irish origin. In its four square miles live 67,489 persons, as compared with 78,516 in 1930. Ald. Hugh B. Connelly, finishing his second term, is Democratic ward committeeman. William S. Finucane is the G. O. P. committeeman. The 11th is strongly Democratic.

TWELFTH—Taking in both residential and industrial areas, the 12th ward is a mixture of many racial origins, principally Poles, Liths, Bohemians, Italians and Irish. It covers 4.8 square miles. Its 1940 population of 69,174 was a sharp drop from the 77,328 in 1940. Bryan Hartnett, a Democrat, has represented the ward continuously since 1927 and is running again, with little G. O. P. opposition in sight. Former Ald. Frank V. Zintak is Democratic ward committeeman. Felix Kucharski is the G.O.P. committeeman.

THIRTEENTH—Second largest in the city, the 13th ward contains the Chicago airport, considerable commercial and industrial territory, and large middle class residential regions. It occupies 16 square miles and its population of 78,820 is practically unchanged since 1930. The present alderman, Michael P. Hogan, with city hall help four years ago unseated Ald. John Egan, who bolted to the Courtney camp. The ward committeemen are the Democrat, County Clerk Michael J. Flynn, and the Republican, George O. Lehr.

FOURTEENTH—The Irish of the famous "back o' the yards" area make up the backbone of the 14th. The Union stockyards occupy the north part. There is some industry in the southeast area. The ward has three square miles of area and 62,194 inhabitants, 9,000 fewer than in 1930. Former Ald. James J. McDermott, newly elected member of the board of tax appeals, is Democratic ward committeeman. The G. O. P. committeeman is James W. Breen.

FIFTEENTH — Homes and apartments around an industrial area

The Literary and Athletic club of the Chicago Surface Lines is quartered in the car barns at the 77th and Vincennes depot. It is the largest of the five employ clubs within the lines. Its facilities are used by 850 street car men, and its activities are directed by officers and a board of nine directors. Shown are Owen T. Duncan (holding paper), secretary, and seated around the table are John J. O'Connor, president; Harry F. Barry, vice president, and Arthur H. Feltz, treasurer. At the left are Ervin E. Knapp, John V. Goyke, and in the back row Rudolph A. Nelson, E. C. Tocci, J. F. Brady, John W. Cassidy, W. F. Gill, and Phillip A. O'Malley, board members.

Eight huge tables fill the clubroom of the L. & A. club. There are two billiard tables, five tables for pool, and one for snooker. The click of the balls and music from the juke box make the club a popular spot. William Leske, 249 West Marquette road, right, is an outstanding player. Here he plays a game with Walter Story, 4243 Congress street.

A game of checkers is a pleasant interlude for Gus Pulaski, 8119 Sangamon street, and Dan Whitenack, 7705 Stewart avenue. A conductor on the 75th street line, Pulaski is a veteran, having started in 1895. Whitenack, who began with the company in 1904, is a conductor on the 87th street line.

"All aboard!" They ride as well as drive. Ready to board the car are E. E. Knapp, John W. Cassidy, and J. O. Shaw, a policeman. Standing on the platform are W. F. Gill, J. J. O'Connor, Ernest Tocci, Ginger Varney, motorman, and Frank Claxton, conductor.

CHICAGO HEIGHTS TO OPEN NURSING AID CLASS FEB. 1

A class for Nurses' aids will start at St. James hospital, Chicago Heights, about Feb. 1, it has been announced by Pierce Vandercook, Red Cross general chairman for Chicago Heights.

Recruiting is scheduled to start immediately, and prospective Nurses' aids are being interviewed Thursday at Red Cross—OCD headquarters in the City hall, Chicago Heights, Vandercook said.

Training will consist of 40 hours of classroom work, and 45 hours of practical experience in hospital wards. Women between 18 and 50, who are American citizens in good health, are eligible, Vandercook announced. He said that more than 50 Nurses' aids are needed in the Chicago Heights area so that the hospital staffs may have adequate assistance.

THOMAS LOGAN, FIRE BATTALION CHIEF, RETIRES

Wins Bravery Citations in 36 Years' Service.

Thomas B. Logan, a city fireman for 36 years and battalion chief since 1926, has retired on pension at the age of 63. He has moved out to a place with a gardening plot at 17749 Golf View avenue, Homewood, where he plans to do some gardening, play golf and do whatever he can to help in the war.

Thomas B. Logan.

He bears some scars of his service, notably from severe burns which hospitalized him for nine weeks after an explosion at an oil company refinery at 18th street and Wentworth avenue shortly before 1920.

Fought Stockyards Fires.

Logan was on the scene at two large stockyards fires and fought several big elevator blazes in the south Chicago area.

"I don't feel as old as they say I am," the fireman said, and it may be because he has always kept active. He played professional baseball with the Toledo Mudhens, the South Bend team and the Vernon, Cal., team before joining the fire department and for more than 30 years one of his chief diversions has been golf.

Logan became a fireman in 1907, and served for 3½ years at engine house No. 10, then at La Salle and Harrison streets. He became a lieutenant in 1913 at engine house No. 8, then with hook and ladder companies No. 4 at 22d and Wentworth avenue and No. 34 at 73d street and Dobson avenue. He was made captain in 1919 with engine company No. 46 in South Chicago and served from 1920 to 1926 as captain at hook and ladder headquarters No. 16, 63d and Dorchester avenue.

Took Charge of Battalion.

Then he was made chief in charge of the 10th battalion, with headquarters at 31st and Dearborn streets, was transferred to the 16th battalion, with headquarters at 46th street and Cottage Grove avenue in 1929, and in 1935, was assigned to the 19th battalion, headquarters at 73d street and Dobson avenue, where he remained until his retirement.

HOPE TO KEEP NEW PLAN IN LOCAL HANDS

Stress Many Benefits for Suburbs.

Defense transportation chairmen have been named in communities in the Chicago metropolitan area to organize the new share-the-ride campaign inaugurated under joint sponsorship of the area offices of civilian defense and defense transportation.

A home to home survey, to ask all Chicagoland automobile owners to become members of group riding clubs, will be planned this week by these OCD volunteers at meetings in civilian defense headquarters thruout the city and suburbs.

Territory covered by the campaign extends from Waukegan on the north to Steger and South Chicago Heights on the south, and as far west as Naperville and Wheaton.

Broad Program in Suburbs.

In Chicago, where local transit facilities are extensive, the campaign will stress group riding to and from work.

Among the 118 suburban communities included in the area the campaign will be broader in scope, covering group riding to commuter trains, to school, to church, to clubs, and for shopping. This is due to the general lack of adequate transportation facilities in many towns.

During the course of the campaign, OCD personnel will ask every auto driver not already participating in a group riders' club to register as a prospective member.

Each motorist who registers gives his name, address, place of employment or other destination, hours of work or travel, and the capacity of his automobile. OCD volunteers will then determine groupings for each individual and advise him of others with the same hours, destination, etc.

Adopt Highland Park Plan.

The Highland Park share-the-ride plan, conceived last January by a north shore commuter, and developed there last year, has been chosen by Charles E. DeLeuw, area ODT co-administrator, as a model for the 118 other suburban communities.

Copies of a booklet outlining the methods and results of the Highland Park group riding plan have been mailed to OCD transportation committees.

"Many persons are now sharing their cars alternately in driving to and from work," De Leuw said. "These active group riders include employés of more than 650 war factories in the Chicago area. But in view of the serious shortage of rubber and the shortage of repair parts for automobiles there are still too many motorists driving alone."

Saves Tires and Autos.

"By stepping up the average load factor of each car to four or five persons the wear and tear on private automobile tires may be reduced by 75 or 80 per cent," he stated.

Major objectives of the campaign are:

Conservation of tires now on private autos.

Curtailment of nonessential driving.

Prevention of a breakdown in local transportation, thru greater use of automobiles.

Take Turns Driving.

When three car owners form a group each has his turn driving the others in his car one week out of every three. The other two weeks his car is not used. If the group consists of four or five, each auto operates even fewer weeks.

The share-the-ride plan completes the list of measures devised so far to curtail use of rubber. These measures include mileage [gasoline] rationing, staggered hours, revised routes and schedules, and the national 35 mile an hour speed limit.

Division transportation chairmen whose area include southwest side communities are William J. Venning, 12137 Stewart avenue, of division 2, and Edgar F. Bradford, 610 West 35th street, of division 3. Community chairmen on their committees include:

Ray E. Glover, 10717 Hale avenue, Morgan Park; Edward J. Hines, 7714 Carpenter street, Auburn Park; James L. Merrick, 8927 South Racine avenue, Brainerd; J. J. Winter, 618 West 87th street, Gresham; W. O. Olden, 10158 South Racine avenue, Washington Heights; Edward H. Taylor, 1252 West 112th place, Ada; Stanley Schwartz, 4954 South Kedvale avenue, Archer Heights.

Jerry J. Viterna, transportation chairman for the Cicero area, has not announced his chairmen. His area on the southwest side includes McCook, Summit, Bedford Park, and Justice.

make up most of the 15th ward's 3.3 square miles. The population dropped to 65,849 in 1940 from 71,352 10 years earlier. The Democratic ward organization, headed by Richard Frohlich, chief deputy Municipal court clerk, has indorsed Ald. James F. Kovarik for a sixth term. The G. O. P. group, with Michael A. Ruddy at its head, was still hunting for a candidate last week.

Sixteenth—Fanning westward from 63d and Halsted streets, the 16th ward is almost solidly residential. It is one of the oldest and most densely populated parts of the city. In its 2.5 square miles live 70,299 persons, 3,200 fewer than in 1930. It showed a Republican gain last November when it came within a few hundred votes of going to Sen. Brooks. Former Ald. Terence F. Moran, who lost his seat to John S. Boyle in a bitter Kelly-Courtney factional battle four years ago, is Democratic committeeman. William H. Reid is G. O. P. committeeman. The Democrats have indorsed Paul Sheridan, son of Michael Sheridan of the old board of assessors. The G. O. P. choice is Richard J. Burns, bailiff for Circuit Judge Julius Miner.

SEVENTEENTH—This mainly residential ward is traversed by numerous important business streets. It is 3.5 square miles in area and its 75,200 population is somewhat smaller than that of 1930. Ald. William T. Murphy, who is also Democratic ward committeeman, is ending his second term. The G. O. P. committeeman is Henry D. Lindblad, a candidate for city clerk. The ward went to Green for mayor in 1939 and for governor a year later, for Brooks for senator last November. It returned a slim Democratic margin in 1938.

EIGHTEENTH—The east side has some industry but the rest of the ward is heavily residential, its people largely of Irish, German, Dutch, and Swedish extraction. The ward occupies 8.6 square miles and its 1940 population was 75,352, a drop of more than 5,000 in 10 years. The present alderman, Bernard O'Hallaren, unseated a Courtney Democrat, Harry E. Perry, four years ago in a runoff. State Sen. John M. Lee is Democratic ward committeeman. The G. O. P. committeeman is George M. Fisher, secretary of his county central committee and a member of the State Court of Claims. The Democrats lost the 18th to Gov. Green two years ago and Sen. Brooks carried for the G. O. P. last November.

NINETEENTH—This ward contains two of the city's highest type residential sections, Beverly and Morgan Park. Its 14.8 square miles have a population of 69,814, representing a growth of about 3,500 in 10 years. Thomas D. Nash, Democratic ward committeeman, has declared for Ald. John J. Duffy, who is rounding out his second term. Harry A. Carlson, the G. O. P. committeeman, is the Republican organization choice. In city, state, and national elections the 19th usually goes Republican.

This Week in the Garden

If the outdoor bulb beds were not mulched [protected] do so before the spring thaws set in. Straw, free from weeds, coarse manure, litter of any kind, or glass wool may be used. Glass wool comes in small bales, costs more, but can be used for three years or more. Decayed manure when used as a mulch can be spaded or worked into the soil in spring.

Humus is so essential in plant growing that every effort should be made to obtain rich compost or decayed manure to spade under in the spring. Soils in many home gardens pack hard following a rain and cracks appear during the hot summer days, which are caused by a lack of humus.

Tuesday, Jan. 19.

It is nearing the time when some seeds should be sown to obtain good, strong plants for outdoor use. Lay in enough soil so it will be in prime condition for sowing. An excellent medium for sowing is two parts soil, two parts peat, and sufficient sand to insure porosity.

Dry soil should never be used for seeds or plants of any kind; if it is dry, take the sprinkler and water the dry soil, working it over and over with a spade. Small quantities of soil can easily be worked over with the hands.

Small seeds can be sown in rows or scattered broadcast over the surface of the soil and pressed in with a smooth board. The rule usually adopted is to sow twice the thickness of the seed.

The best way to water and not disturb the seeds is to place the container in a basin of water and allow it to soak up enough water until the surface is moist, then remove container and allow it to drain.

Wednesday, Jan. 20.

Gardeners who want to improve their surroundings with shrubs should not overplant. Key plants can be placed at their proper, mature distances and when the group needs rearranging these key plants can remain.

Study the ultimate growth of the materials and plant accordingly. Use a few of the newer varieties to lend interest. Never select tall plants where more dwarf plants are needed. Plant shrubs in good, rich soil; if the soil is too heavy remove it entirely and replace with fresh soil.

Thursday, Jan. 21.

Attention is again called to the use of the hotbed and coldframe. There is nothing among garden accessories that is more valuable.

See that all tools are in condition for early use. Give a coat of paint to all parts that can be painted. Sharpen hoes, spades, and lawn mower. Repair and paint garden furniture, birdhouses, garden seats, and clean statuary.

Tools kept in good condition make gardening much easier. The beginning gardener needs few tools, such as a good hoe, spade, or spading fork, garden line, and a trowel.

Friday, Jan. 22.

As the season advances, look over the perennial borders to rearrange the mulching materials that may have been placed over the crowns of plants. Plants that have persistent foliage are often smothered out.

Give house plants frequent syringing. The maximum of light should be given most house plants. Never overwater house plants but see that they are not permitted to dry out.

Toward spring, house plants that have been in a dormant and semi-resting state will show activity, at which time more plant food can be applied and more water given.

Saturday, Jan. 23.

Pot plants that are filled with roots may need repotting or an application of plant food. Pinch back weak growths to force a stronger growth from the base or lower down on the stems.

Hard wood cuttings can be made from many shrubs by using the new wood or wood formed last season. Make the cuttings six to eight inches long, depending on the kind, tie in bundles, properly labeled, and place in boxes of damp sawdust or peat, allowing one end to be exposed.

In early spring line out in the garden, leaving one or more buds above ground. These cuttings will form a callus before planting and all should root. Grapevines can be pruned now. Prune rather hard to obtain new wood.

SOUTHWEST SIDE CIVIC FEDERATION PLANS PROPECTS

The Southwest Civic federation, Marquette park, announces six objectives for the new year, according to Alfred N. Nilsen, president. The federation will endorse the establishment of a branch library in the vicinity of 71st street and Western avenue and also in the neighborhood of Archer avenue and Pulaski road, Nilsen said. Present quarters of the Chicago Lawn library are inadequate, and the federation will agitate for a new building to serve the communities of Marquette Manor and Chicago Lawn.

The federation recommends a new school for the Clearing district, and suggests that the Hale school be turned over to the government for use as a training school for flyers. Resurfacing of all streets in the Clearing district is sought.

The federation would like to see the completion of the stop and go signals at 63d street and Central avenue, at 55th street and Central avenue, and at 55th street and Narragansett avenue. Members in 1943 will continue efforts to abolish lake pollution.

South Side Cinema Club.

Dr. Cleveland C. MacLane will show a colored movie, "Chicago in its Bit for Victory," at a meeting of the South Side Cinema club on Wednesday, Jan. 27, in the Hamilton park fieldhouse. The amateur movie is accompanied by a musical background. Milton T. Nelson is president.

INDIAN POTTER'S SKILL REVIVED IN MATTESON CLASS

Reveals What's in Heart, Teacher Declares.

Seventh and eighth grade children at the Matteson school are becoming skilful potters, in the American Indian tradition, under the guidance of Mrs. Stuart Y. Patterson, Olympia Fields.

Each Friday afternoon, the children put away their texts and bring out smocks, hairnets [a fallen hair mars pottery], and stone crocks filled with clay, kept moist with dampened cloths.

They unwrap the clay in the cheerful schoolroom, and then guided by Mrs. Patterson, "throw it on a batt of plaster of Paris which resists clay.

Pupils Are Attentive.

"What's in your heart comes out thru the tips of your fingers when you're working with clay," Mrs. Patterson reminds the class. The children stiffen to attention, looking warily at the clay before them.

Mrs. Patterson is the national head of the American Indian Art institute, and has held the position since 1932. In her home there is a $25,000 museum of Indian art, the finest private collection in America, which is the result of an interest which began 19 years ago when her daughter married and moved to California.

Mrs. Patterson teaches at the Matteson school on a volnnteer basis, according to Oscar W. Huth, principal. "Mrs. Patterson is an inspiring teacher," he said, "and the children do beautiful work, since each step is invested with its own special meaning."

Aid in Rehabilitation.

"We older women won our certificates and did our Red Cross work in the last war," Mrs. Patterson responds. "We can well let the younger people have the rôle today. I feel that the introduction of pottery is my war work. Young as these children are, I hope that some day they will be able to help in rehabilitation centers. Pottery offers relaxation for overburdened nerves, and cases of shellshock."

Infantile paralysis victims are taught the art. New muscles are brought into play, and one young girl with whom Mrs. Patterson worked three years ago recovered to the point where she now teaches pottery in Warm Springs, Ga.

On Saturdays Mrs. Patterson meets with the Matteson Girl Scouts in the basement of the school. The janitor willingly moved out of his quarters so that the potterers could move in. Mrs. William Mellett, Olympia Fields, a Red Cross and civilian defense worker, assists the teacher, and Mrs. Dewey Fetherling, Matteson, is scout leader.

Three Mothers Work.

Helping in the Girl Scout class and learning pottery themselves are three mothers—Mrs. T. L. Perkins, Mrs. Walter Jones, and Mrs. E. J. Myers.

The coil system of pottery is used. Upon a base of modeled clay is placed a clay coil. The piece is built up by successive coils. When the children smooth the base and coil together, they say, "We rob Peter to pay Paul."

The first effort, a small bowl, had its side enriched with the "Running water" design, a favorite of Mrs. Patterson's. The old Indian prayer reads: "For always it runs north and south and east and west and there is no life without it." On the bottom of each piece the pupil etches his initials, the year, and an arrow which is Mrs. Patterson's own kiln mark.

The Navajo Indians of the southwest have welcomed visits from Mr. and Mrs. Patterson thru the years. Few of the old artisans are left, but the pottery expert has been able to preserve the finer points of "man's oldest craft." She points out that Austria recognized the worth of Indian art before this country, and reports that one of the best collections of the world is in Vienna. Mrs. Patterson's collection, and her own original pieces, have been displayed thruout the United States. It's an expensive exhibition, however, for $500 worth of pottery has been broken—by the public which picks up pieces to examine them.

CHICAGO HOME OWNER MAKES MANY CHANGES

Helps by Doing Some of Work Himself.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Repair and remodel now. Keep your house functioning and conserve the supply of civilian goods by making things last as long as possible.

These are all watchwords of the day.

In 1937 he decided to begin to do some things for his five room brick bungalow at 7948 South Anthony. Now Mr. Fehr has a seven room bungalow, with three bathrooms instead of one, and an attic with several large rooms, all valuable, usable space since the upper floor is finished and the attic insulated. And a great deal of this work Mr. Fehr did himself.

Installed New Bath.

One of the first changes effected was to take space from the front hallway and bedroom and install a new bathroom. A new closet was built at an angle on the bedroom wall opposite the bath. This improvement has added an attractive bedroom and bath suite.

Later Mr. Fehr decided to add a third bedroom and bathroom at the back of the house and so for this he appropriated half of the rear porch and the old-fashioned pantry. Again a new closet was built at an angle in the outside wall. The new bathroom has yellow tile walls, black fixtures, a glass block window, and yellow accessories. The bedroom drapes and fittings are yellow and the furnishings blond.

New Recessed Shelves.

In the bedroom closets there are neatly placed shelves and racks for wardrobe needs. In the kitchen there are recessed shelves above the refrigerator and a nicely designed cabinet with mirrored shelves for house linens. A telephone niche has been placed in the hall between the dining room and kitchen, and in the bathrooms are recessed shelves for accessories.

ASKS RADIONICS BE USED INSTEAD OF ELECTRONICS

American Term Is Called More Descriptive.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Dr. Arthur F. Van Dyck, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, has suggested that "radionics" is a better word than "electronics." Electronics is of British origin and long has been widely used. More recently radionics has been introduced in America. Dr. Van Dyck told the engineers at their membership dinner in Chicago that "radionics" is an apt term to describe this field of activity.

Both terms deal with the application of vacuum tubes in electrical circuits not only for broadcasting and other radio communications, but to radio receivers, television, photoelectric units, rectifiers, phonographs, hearing aids, and many other allied items.

Radionics More Descriptive.

Last week E. F. McDonald Jr., the Chicago radio developer and manufacturer, seconded the move of Dr. Van Dyck.

"Most of the leaders of the radio industry to whom I have talked feel that the American term 'radionics' is more descriptive and less confusing to the public," he said.

"Radionics in my opinion," he continued, "is a word fit to describe the miracles now being wrought behind secret panels of laboratories for the winning of the war."

"Much to the Point."

"Radionics springs from the Latin 'to radiate,'" according to McDonald, "and from the Greek 'ion' [to wander or travel], and thus we get the term 'wandering or traveling radiations' which is much to the point and extremely descriptive.

"Electronics springs from the Greek root meaning 'amber' which was discovered to have certain properties when rubbed. Therefore I take it that electronics is wandering amber. Is that descriptive?

"The term 'electron' is of British origin, having been first used by C. J. Stoney in 1891. Since we did not adopt the British words petrol, underground, bobby, pup, valve, and wireless—instead using the Americanisms gasoline, subway, policeman, saloon, tube, and radio—why should we adopt the word electronics?"

ST. GEORGE HIGH WILL BE SALUTED ON CITIZENS HOUR

St. George High school of Evanston will be saluted from 1 to 1:30 p. m. today on W-G-N Citizens of Tomorrow.

Brother Patrick, principal at St. George, will discuss the preinduction program now being followed at St. George. He will be introduced by Philip Maxwell, master of ceremonies.

The senior class glee club will sing two numbers, "On Great Lone Hills" by Sibelius and "Ave Maria" by Tresch. Maxwell will add two more names to the Roll of Honor—Bernard J. Ahern, senior at St. George, and Tommy Corlett, Oskaloosa, Ia.

In 'Easy Money'

Ruth Parrott will play the part of Lila on today's "Easy Money" broadcast at 6:30 p. m. over W-G-N.

'MIGHTIER THAN SWORD' TO TELL SINGAPORE FALL

The story of Japanese fifth column activities coupled with international intrigue, which caused the downfall of Singapore, will be told by Stanley Johnston on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program to be broadcast on W-G-N from 8:30 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, was told the story by a Chinese evacuée after the fall of Singapore. At that time Johnston was on assignment on the west coast, waiting to join the American fleet in the Pacific.

The program will show how the Japanese gained control of public thought by influencing censorship of stories leaving Singapore for newspapers in countries all over the world.

Another factor contributing to the success of the Japanese attack was the work of one particularly ruthless feminine spy.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La Frandre. Laurette Fillbrandt will play the leading rôle on this week's program.

Anderson and Coulouris on Reader's Digest Today

Judith Anderson and George Coulouris will co-star on Radio Reader's Digest at 8 p. m. today over WBBM-CBS. They will present "The Greatest Hoax in History."

'MARTHA' TO BE PRESENTED ON THEATER OF AIR

"Martha," von Flotow's best known opera, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 next Saturday evening. This show is broadcast over W-G-N, W59C and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

Marion Claire, noted soprano, and Eugene Conley, young tenor of the San Carlo Opera company, will be starred.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, will be the speaker of the evening.

Kenneth MacGregor, chief of production for W-G-N, has prepared a special radio version of the opera that retains both the story and the important musical selections.

Miss Claire will portray the rôle of Lady Harriet of Queen Anne's court in Hampton, England, who drops her rank and changes her name to Martha. Conley will be cast as a farmer, Lionel, later disclosed as heir to the earldom of Derby.

A complete dramatic cast will portray the speaking rôles of the opera. Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. A supporting singing cast also will be presented on the show.

Best known aria of the opera is "The Last Rose of Summer."

TREASURE HOUR OF SONG COMING BACK ON W-G-N

"The Treasure Hour of Song" will return to W-G-N and Mutual next Thursday from 8:30 to 9 p. m. The program will present Licia Albanese, soprano; Francesco Valentino, baritone, and Alfredo Antonini's concert orchestra.

The singers are members of the Metropolitan Opera company. Together with the 25 piece orchestra, they will be heard in well known operatic arias and musical comedy songs.

CADETS IN FIVE ROTC UNITS WIN TRIBUNE MEDALS

Hold Southwest Side High School Ceremonies.

Twenty-one gold medals and seven silver medals were presented by THE TRIBUNE to outstanding cadets in five southwest high school R. O. T. C. in military ceremonies recently.

Awards were made last week in Harper, Fenger, Morgan Park, and Kelly High schools and the previous week-end at Englewood High, with Philip Maxwell and other members of the editorial staff representing the newspaper.

The awards were instituted thru the interest of Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, who was largely instrumental in establishing the city high school corps in 1917 and has continued promotion and support since. The Tribune medals were established in 1935.

In most schools the R. O. T. C. corps presented colors in opening patriotic ceremonies, bands played, and cadets stood straight, marched briskly, saluted, and clicked heels with the precision of veterans. Student bodies applauded the demonstrations.

Cadets advanced to receive not only Tribune but also R. O. T. C. department, D. A. R., American Legion, and other awards won during the last semester.

Englewood and Fenger High schools, with larger cadet units, each qualified five for gold and two for silver Tribune medals. Gold medals are for upper classmen and silver for freshmen.

Winners of Tribune and other awards were:

ENGLEWOOD.

Sergt. A. T. Roberts is R. O. T. C. instructor.

FENGER.

Fix-it Shops in City's Parks

"Fix-it" shops for home equipment have been fitted up in 12 park fieldhouses. Community shortages have made the replacement of many household articles impossible, and the "fix your own" plan is the answer. Gage park maintains a shop well equipped for wood working. Boys and girls are welcome in the shop, beginning at 3:15 o'clock on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays. Adults may come in the evening by appointment. In the picture Leonard Plefka, 17, of 5359 South Mozart street, repairs a toy bed; Joseph Kominkiewicz, 14, of 4914 South Wood street, puts his mother's kitchen wall clock in order; Frank Sturmer, shop instructor, supervises, and Joseph Krozel, 17, of 5526 South Rockwell street, examines the damaged electrical connections of a desk lamp.

Eloyse Menard, 20, of 7026 Union avenue, is a technical clerk in a South Chicago steel plant. She is taking the "fix-it" shop metal lathe course at Hamilton park fieldhouse as preparation for a position as a war plant worker. Hamilton park's shop, the only one in the city equipped with lathes for metal work, is open to children over 12 years old after 3:15 o'clock on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons. Adults may join the class at 7 o'clock on the evening of these days. Lewis Stafford is the shop instructor. All shop workers wear goggles while busy with operations.

STREET CAR MEN HAVE END O'LINE 'RUMPUS ROOM'

Your street car conductor may find the back platform of his car a bit chilly these days, but once his "run" is completed, he can hop from the car at the 77th and Vincennes depot of the Chicago Surface Lines, and take the stairs two at a time to the second floor L. & A. club. There the cheerful company of joking, smoking, billiard playing fellow conductors, motormen, or bus drivers offers warmth.

The Literary and Athletic club is one of five employé clubs of the street car company. Organized shortly after the turn of the century, it fills a need of the men awaiting their "runs." The company has turned over the second floor of the car depot for club facilities, and has provided a baseball diamond, Bessett field, in an adjacent plot. It is named after W. A. Bessett, stationmaster.

Equipped for Fun.

The 850 members of L. & A. pay 25 cents a month in dues, and receive a world of fun in return. The equipment of the club includes: Eight billiard tables, a barber shop, showers and lockers, juke box, piano, punching bag, duck pins, lounge chairs, 550 chairs stored for meetings, checker table, and a board of directors room.

Based upon the formal frame of officers and a board, the club immediately radiates good fellowship and informality once this formality is observed.

John O'Connor, 1030 West 92d place, a bus supervisor who has been with the surface lines for 15 years, is president. The vice president is a 20 year employé, Harry Barry, 7639 Ada street, bus driver. Owen T. Duncan, 6240 Bishop street, is secretary. Duncan is the chief clerk in the 77th street office, and has been with the company for 26 years. Arthur H. Feltz, 7840 Stewart avenue, treasurer, is a bus driver, and a veteran of 15 years' experience.

List Club Directors.

The directors include P. A. O'Malley, R. A. Nelson, J. F. Brady, W. F. Gill, J. P. Murphy, George Beicic, Ervin Knapp, J. V. Goyke, and J. W. Cassidy.

The boys on the club's softball team are the fairhaired boys of L. & A. Last fall they walked off with the city championship in the industrial and fraternal softball league. In both 1942 and 1941 they were the champs of the surface lines. No other team has held this distinction two years in succession. And from the proceeds of the championship games the team last fall was able to present $439 to the sailors' relief fund at Great Lakes Naval Training station.

Byrne Pilots Team.

From mid-May to Aug. 15, the team and its followers spend Sunday mornings at Bessett field. Their feminine cheering section once complained about the lack of shade around the bleachers, which seat 500. The boys gallantly had their caretaker plant 10 trees, which show promise of excellent shade—in about 10 years.

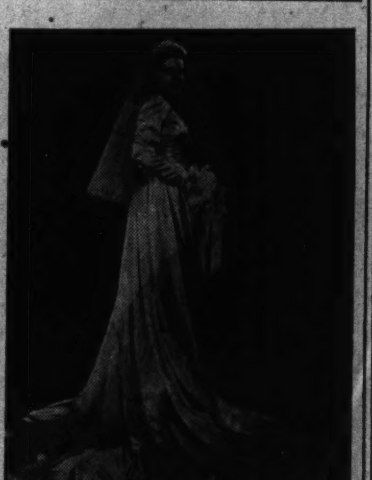
Photographer Goes Along.

Yearly jaunts to Lake Hills Country club, St. Johns, Ind., and the Shabbona Gun club, Morris, Ill., are reminiscent of a royal procession. Their photographer, Fred Schroeder, now with the army air forces at Paine Field, Wash., accompanied the golf and trapshooting teams to record their victories on film. Enlarged, the framed pictures enhance the walls of the club.

Letters from the 47 L. & A. men who are carrying on for Uncle Sam are posted on a bulletin board. Four marines are still with L. & A. from the 125 men it sent into service in World War I. One of them, Michael Tierney, a conductor on the Halsted street run, recruits marine corps prospects from his back platform passengers.

As for the literary in L. & A.—there is a shelf of books tucked into a bookcase in the directors' room. But mostly the boys are "muscle men," they laugh.

Anne Molloy Weds



[Allmon Photo.]

Married recently in St. Nicholas of Tolentine church, 3731 West 62d street, Mrs. John Matthew Coleman is the former Miss Anne Marie Molloy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Molloy, 3319 West 61st street. Her husband, who is now at Camp Grant, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Coleman, 6142 South Francisco avenue.

Noel Gerson a Captain

Noel Gerson, former W-G-N staff member, has been promoted to a captaincy on the staff of Maj. Gen. H. S. Aurand, commanding officer of the 6th service command.

NORTH BEVERLY DIRECTORS ARE NAMED FOR YEAR

SEE G.O.P. GAIN IN NORTHWEST COUNCIL VOTE

Vote Records Bright in Five Wards.

Republican leaders last week began lining up popular standard bearers for five northwest side wards which they hope to annex in the Feb. 23 aldermanic election. They base their optimism on the Republican strength shown by the 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, and 41st wards in the last four general elections.

Probably best known of the new Republican candidates is Lloyd C. Larson, 38th ward aspirant, who polled 18,057 votes to Michael Flynn's 14,904 votes in the 38th in the race for county clerk last fall. Larson, who is 44 years old, lives at 4902 Cornelia avenue and has been active in civic organizations and A. A. U. and other athletic events as an official in recent years. He is a director of the Swedish club and a member of the Svithiod Singing society.

Indorsed by Ward G. O. P.

Larson has been indorsed by the regular 38th ward Republican organization, which is headed by Frank M. Kalteux, secretary of the Illinois commerce commission. He will be opposed by P. J. [Parkie] Cullerton, now in his second term as alderman. Cullerton has been indorsed by the Democratic organization, of which he is committeeman. The 38th voted for Green for mayor in 1939 and for Green for governor in 1940 and for Brooks in the 1942 senatorial campaign.

Herman [Max] Richter, 33 years old, 1913 North Kildare avenue, has been selected to represent the 36th ward regular Republican organization. Richter, who was born at his present address, is a former all-city and all-state football player at Schurz High school. Richard M. Walsh, completing his first term as alderman of the 36th has been indorsed by George W. Robinson, Democratic committeeman, and his organization. The ward has voted Republican in the last three general elections.

39th Votes Republican.

The 39th ward, which also has gone Republican in the last three general elections, indicates a fight thus far between H. L. [Hy] Brody, who has been alderman since 1935, and James A. Davis, merchant and ex-service man who has been indorsed by the regular Republican organization.

The 37th and 41st wards returned heavy G. O. P. majorities in the last four general elections but neither Republican organization has indorsed a candidate yet. The Democrats have indorsed Francis E. Callaghan, first term alderman, in the 37th, and William J. Cowhey, second term alderman in the 41st. Plenty of candidates, with and without party indorsements are expected to file petitions by Tuesday, the deadline.

BAKING COMPANY EMPLOYES 100% DONORS OF BLOOD

Fifty-eight employés of the Imperial Baking company, 1017 North Damen avenue, have given blood at the Red Cross blood donor center, 5 North Wabash avenue. This group blood donation represents 100 per cent of the employés of the company eligible to give their blood, King said. Arrangements for the enrollment of the donors was made by the president of the company. So far as is known, this is the first 100 per cent donation by any group of workers in the Chicago area, Red Cross officials stated.

Engagement Told

Mrs. Marie Schweitzer of 3956 Lawrence avenue, recently announced the engagement of her daughter, Rosebud, to Sheldon R. Maltz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lye Maltz of 3716 Leland avenue.

Revamp North Park College Courses to Meet Wartime Needs

From all over the world students come to North Park, and the stories of their experiences contribute to the international understanding of the entire student body. In the group above, the students and the countries they represent are, left to right, Kari Maseng, Norway; Edgar Lisano, Costa Rica; Linnea Sword, India; Harold Swanson, Venezuela; Karis Oksnevad, Norway; Stig Torstensson, Sweden, and Leonard Quarnstrom, Canada.

ORPHANS TO SEE TRIBUNE COMICS IN RETROSPECT

The boys and girls out at the Bensenville Evangelical Orphan home soon will be reviewing Dick Tracy's adventures for last year, going back to re-read what Orphan Annie did in January, 1942, and checking up on the year's activities of Terry and the Pirates.

They'll be able to do all that with the scrapbook just completed for them by Mrs. Irvin C. Rodin, 2041 Bradley place. She has bound into two volumes all THE TRIBUNE comic books and comic sections for 1942, and is giving them to the orphan's home.

The job was started early last year by Mrs. Rodin's father, Louis G. Laechelt Sr. He enjoyed the comics so much himself he felt they should be saved to give pleasure to some one else. But he lived only a few weeks after starting the scrapbooks, so Mrs. Rodin decided to carry on the job her father had begun.

Mrs. Rodin is a member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Bensenville Orphanage, and has done much work with the youngsters there. She doesn't make as many trips out to Bensenville since gasoline rationing, and will send the scrapbooks to the children with the Rev. Harry Brueckner, pastor of the Epiphany Evangelical church, Bradley place and Damen avenue.

The 90 children at the home won't be the only ones who will enjoy the big cardboard bound scrapbook and the smaller volume of bound comic books. Mrs. Rodin has a hunch that the elderly people in the nearby Old People's home will get almost as much pleasure from Gasoline Alley and Winnie Winkle and Brenda Starr as the children.

HOPE TO KEEP NEW PLAN IN LOCAL HANDS

Stress Many Benefits for Suburbs.

Defense transportation chairmen have been named in communities in the Chicago metropolitan area to organize the new share-the-ride campaign inaugurated under joint sponsorship of the area offices of civilian defense and defense transportation.

A home to home survey, to ask all Chicagoland automobile owners to become members of group riding clubs, will be planned this week by these OCD volunteers at meetings in civilian defense headquarters thruout the city and suburbs.

Territory covered by the campaign extends from Waukegan on the north to Steger and South Chicago Heights on the south, and as far west as Naperville and Wheaton.

Broad Program in Suburbs.

In Chicago, where local transit facilities are extensive, the campaign will stress group riding to and from work.

Among the 118 suburban communities included in the area the campaign will be broader in scope, covering group riding to commuter trains, to school, to church, to clubs, and for shopping. This is due to the general lack of adequate transportation facilities in many towns.

During the course of the campaign, OCD personnel will ask every auto driver not already participating in a group riders' club to register as a prospective member.

Adopt Highland Park Plan.

The Highland Park share-the-ride plan, conceived last January by a north shore commuter, and developed there last year, has been chosen by Charles E. DeLeuw, area ODT coadministrator, as a model for the 118 other suburban communities.

"Many persons are now sharing their cars alternately in driving to and from work," De Leuw said. "These active group riders include employés of more than 650 war factories in the Chicago area. But in view of the serious shortage of rubber and the shortage of repair parts for automobiles there are still too many motorists driving alone."

Saves Tires and Autos.

"By stepping up the average load factor of each car to four or five persons the wear and tear on private automobile tires may be reduced by 75 or 80 per cent," he stated.

Major objectives of the campaign are:

Conservation of tires now on private autos.

Curtailment of nonessential driving.

Prevention of a breakdown in local transportation, thru greater use of automobiles.

When three car owners form a group each has his turn driving the others in his car one week out of every three. The other two weeks his car is not used. If the group consists of four or five, each auto operates even fewer weeks.

ASKS RADIONICS BE USED INSTEAD OF ELECTRONICS

American Term Is Called More Descriptive.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Dr. Arthur F. Van Dyck, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, has suggested that "radionics" is a better word than "electronics." Electronics is of British origin and long has been widely used. More recently radionics has been introduced in America. Dr. Van Dyck told the engineers at their membership dinner in Chicago that "radionics" is an apt term to describe this field of activity.

Both terms deal with the application of vacuum tubes in electrical circuits not only for broadcasting and other radio communications, but to radio receivers, television, photoelectric units, rectifiers, phonographs, hearing aids, and many other allied items.

Radionics More Descriptive.

Last week E. F. McDonald Jr., the Chicago radio developer and manufacturer, seconded the move of Dr. Van Dyck.

"Most of the leaders of the radio industry to whom I have talked feel that the American term 'radionics' is more descriptive and less confusing to the public," he said.

"Radionics in my opinion," he continued, "is a word fit to describe the miracles now being wrought behind secret panels of laboratories for the winning of the war."

"Much to the Point."

"Radionics springs from the Latin 'to radiate,'" according to McDonald, "and from the Greek 'ion' [to wander or travel], and thus we get the term 'wandering or traveling radiations' which is much to the point and extremely descriptive.

"Electronics springs from the Greek root meaning 'amber' which was discovered to have certain properties when rubbed. Therefore I take it that electronics is wandering amber. Is that descriptive?

'MARTHA' TO BE PRESENTED ON THEATER OF AIR

"Martha," von Flotow's best known opera, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 next Saturday evening. This show is broadcast over W-G-N, W59C and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

Marion Claire, noted soprano, and Eugene Conley, young tenor of the San Carlo Opera company, will be starred.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, will be the speaker of the evening.

WOMAN INVITES AIR CADETS TO HIT HOUSE IF IT HELPS

An invitation to "knock a few bricks off our chimney" has been sent to navy air cadets in training at the Glenview naval air station by Mrs. Ruth Engel of Palatine.

"I live about two blocks from the auxiliary landing field, Buffalo Grove," she wrote to Comm. G. A. T. Washburn, commanding officer at Glenview. "When the boys are practicing landings, they fly about 150 feet [my guess, of course] over our home. I want you to tell the pilots that this is too high to suit me. If in their training it will help them, they are welcome to roll their wheels along the roof—just so long as they don't hurt themselves."

Mrs. Engel's letter was inspired by protests over the low flying done by aviators in training at the station.

She continued, "You see, I have come to realize what an excellent symphony the roar of these motors is—especially as it grows louder each day as the number of planes increases. I know that these are the planes and the pilots who without a second thought would chase a Zero or Messerschmitt away from my home—even at the cost of their lives."

Glenview officials state that while certain low flying is necessary in training combat pilots, rules of safety are observed at all times.

Cadets reading Mrs. Engel's invitation to knock off the bricks and roll along the roof of her house were cautioned, however, not to take the offer too seriously.

"But we thank Mrs. Engel for her letter. We appreciate her friendly spirit and hope all will be as understanding of our problem as she has been," the officers concluded.

G.O.P. HOPES UP IN WARD FIGHTS OF NORTH SIDE

Predict Hot Battles in Council Races.

BY HAROLD SMITH.

Lively partisan aldermanic battles in all of the north side wards, with an excellent prospect of G. O. P. victory in most of them, were seen by Republican leaders as next Tuesday's filing deadline neared.

All of the north side aldermen are running for reëlection, and all except Frank O. Hilburn in the 47th have been indorsed by the city hall Democratic machine. By the end of the week the Republicans had thrown their support behind strong candidates in all but one of the wards, the 44th, where a talent quest was still in progress.

Hilburn four years ago, with city hall aid, forced the Courtneyite Ald. Albert F. Schulz into a runoff and then snowed him under. Later Hilburn and the Democratic committeeman, Joseph H. Donahue, who had backed Schulz in the election and runoff, got into disputes over patronage and other party matters in the ward.

City Hall Back Nenning.

Donahue, back in the regular ranks again, has persuaded the city hallers to indorse Frank J. Nenning, a print shop owner. The Republicans have announced in favor of Franklin C. E. Lundquist, labor leader. Other candidates are in sight, and the usual free for all is expected.

In the 42d ward, Ald. Dorsey R. Crowe is the indorsed Democrat and the G. O. P. choice is Paul R. Randolph, secretary of the ward organization. In the 43d, former Ald. James B. Waller is backed by the G. O. P. in his third attempt to beat Ald. Mathias [Paddy] Bauler, who entered the council in 1933. Waller came within 243 votes of getting his old seat back in 1939.

The man the Republicans have to beat in the 44th is Ald. John J. Grealis. In the 45th the regular party indorsements have gone to two rivals in the 1939 election—Theron W. Merryman, Republican candidate for county assessor last November, and Ald. Edwin F. Meyer.

Back Lavin in 46th.

In the 46th the party choices are Ald. James F. Young, Democrat, and Atty. George S. Lavin, who ran for congressman at large in the 1940 G. O. P. primary. In the 48th the Republicans have picked Theodore Pickard, a lawyer, to run against Ald. Robert C. Quirk.

William D. Carmen, a glassware wholesaler, has the 49th ward regular G. O. P. support against Ald. Frank Keenan. In the 50th the G. O. P. ward committeeman, Jens M. Jensen, who sent Ald. James R. Quinn into a runoff four years ago, is again a candidate against him.

ROGERS PARK OCD GROUP TO STAGE DEFENSE RALLY

Residents of the Rogers Park-Clark community will stage a civilian defense rally at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening in the Eugene Field school, Lunt and Ashland avenues. Featured speakers will be Ulmer Turner, radio speaker; David G. Bender, coördinator of Boy Scouts, and the Rev. Charles T. Hull.

All block captains and wardens in the eight blocks which comprise zone 1 of community 17 will take an active part in the rally. Ben Kahan, zone captain, has charge. One purpose of the meeting, according to Zahan, is to show how block residents can increase their help in the war.

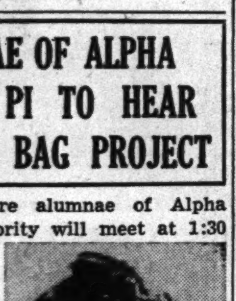
Other speakers on the program will be Leo L. Cole and John Brook, who will discuss "The Business Man in Civilian Defense." Movies of the 1940 London blitz will be shown.

Academy Lecture.

"The Desert Lives" is the title of a free public lecture by Naturalist John Y. Beaty at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon in the Chicago Academy of Sciences, Lincoln park at Clark street and Ogden avenue.

ALUMNAE OF ALPHA DELTA PI TO HEAR OF KIT BAG PROJECT

North Shore alumnae of Alpha Delta Pi sorority will meet at 1:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the home of their president, Mrs. W. S. McDowell, 4875 North Paulina street. Mrs. Harry W. Pearce of Glen Ellyn will be co-hostess.



Mrs. G. Preston Kendall.

Results of the sorority's national campaign to contribute to the Red Cross drive to fill 5,000 kit bags for men embarking for overseas service will be discussed at the meeting by Mrs. G. Preston Kendall of Wilmette, wife of Lt. Kendall of Camp Grant. Mrs. Kendall is chairman of the group's Red Cross unit.

Sailors Meet Their Families and Friends at New Great Lakes Social Center

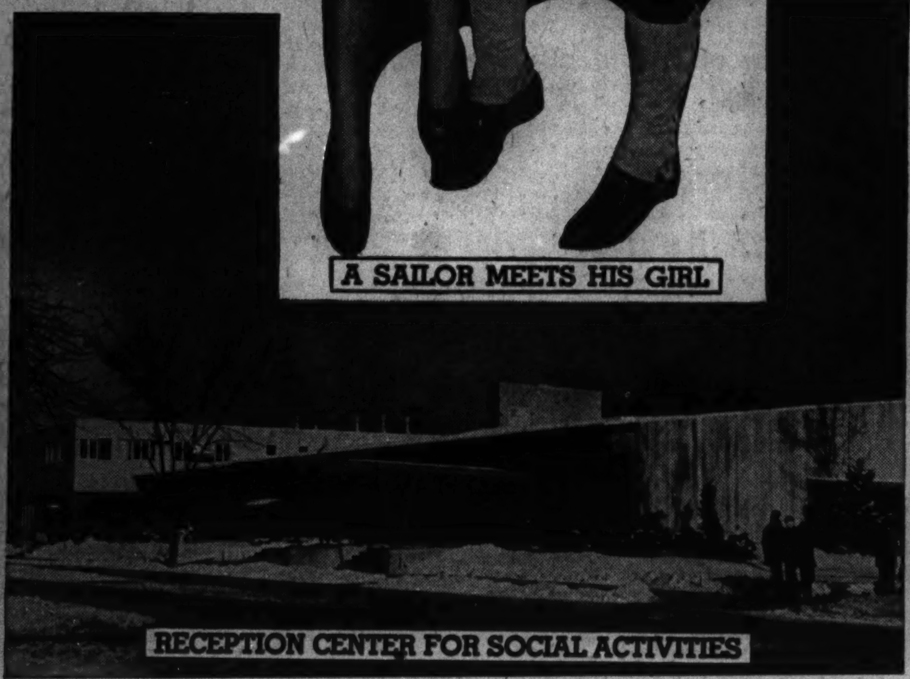
A SAILOR MEETS HIS GIRL

LOUNGE OF RECEPTION CENTER

ALONE DESPITE CROWDS



RECEPTION CENTER FOR SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

FAMILY REUNION

Ultramodern in every detail, building 42, new reception center at the Great Lakes Naval Training station, now is the meeting place of bluejackets and their families and friends. Crowding the center each Sunday afternoon are hundreds of wives, sweethearts, fathers, and mothers. A staff of receptionists makes certain each visitor meets with his sailor. But activity in the center is not confined to Sunday. Any afternoon finds men of the navy entertaining in the lounge. Or perhaps sitting in a far corner at one of the desks writing a letter home. Or perhaps just relaxing on a sofa before one of the two huge fireplaces. Whatever is the case, the sailors agree that the new center is a "mighty fine spot."

HOPE TO KEEP NEW PLAN IN LOCAL HANDS

StressMany Benefits for Suburbs.

Defense transportation chairmen have been named in communities in the Chicago metropolitan area to organize the new share-the-ride campaign inaugurated under joint sponsorship of the area offices of civilian defense and defense transportation.

A home to home survey, to ask all Chicagoland automobile owners to become members of group riding clubs, will be planned this week by these OCD volunteers at meetings in civilian defense headquarters thruout the city and suburbs.

Territory covered by the campaign extends from Waukegan on the north to Steger and South Chicago Heights on the south, and as far west as Naperville and Wheaton.

Broad Program in Suburbs.

In Chicago, where local transit facilities are extensive, the campaign will stress group riding to and from work.

Among the 118 suburban communities included in the area the campaign will be broader in scope, covering group riding to commuter trains, to school, to church, to clubs, and for shopping. This is due to the general lack of adequate transportation facilities in many towns.

During the course of the campaign, OCD personnel will ask every auto driver not already participating in a group riders' club to register as a prospective member.

Adopt Highland Park Plan.

The Highland Park share-the-ride plan, conceived last January by a north shore commuter, and developed there last year, has been chosen by Charles E. DeLeuw, area ODT co-administrator, as a model for the 118 other suburban communities.

"Many persons are now sharing their cars alternately in driving to and from work," De Leuw said. "These active group riders include employés of more than 650 war factories in the Chicago area. But in view of the serious shortage of rubber and the shortage of repair parts for automobiles there are still too many motorists driving alone."

Saves Tires and Autos.

"By stepping up the average load factor of each car to four or five persons the wear and tear on private automobile tires may be reduced by 75 or 80 per cent," he stated.

Major objectives of the campaign are:

Conservation of tires now on private autos.

Curtailment of nonessential driving.

Prevention of a breakdown in local transportation, thru greater use of automobiles.

When three car owners form a group each has his turn driving the others in his car one week out of every three. The other two weeks his car is not used. If the group consists of four or five, each auto operates even fewer weeks.

North Side Leaders.

John P. Keating, 5637 North Ashland avenue, is defense transportation chairman for division 2 of the Chicago metropolitan area OCD. North side community transportation chairmen who will work out the share-the-ride plan under Keating's leadership are:

Clark-Diversey—Henry Steele, 2340 Commonwealth avenue.

Central Uptown—Mrs. Ann Kenny, 4632 Beacon street.

Uptown-Clark—Evar Linder, 2141 Berwyn avenue.

Lincoln Square—John C. Herrig, 2736 Leland avenue.

North Town—Robert P. Devoe, 6453 North Claremont avenue.

Rogers Park-Clark—Albert Mannison, 1658 Farwell avenue.

Indian Boundary—Walter Struve, 2501 Coyle avenue.

Howard business district — Glen Schwendiman, 7417 North Damen avenue.

Community commanders of the six remaining communities in the north side division will name transportation chairmen this week.

The campaign will be operated in north suburbs by the following community transportation chairmen:

Northbrook—Thomas Adams, 2135 Walters avenue.

Niles—Charles Briles, 6720 Ebinger drive.

Skokie—Charles P. Harvey, 8019 Keating avenue.

Winnetka—Mrs. Arthur Woodward, 685 Ardsley road.

Mayor Frank D. Wallin of Waukegan has chosen E. J. Neary, 505 Julian street, Waukegan, to head the joint Waugekan-North Chicago transportation committee. Neary, an instructor at Waukegan Township High school, also is chairman of the Waukegan safety council.

EXHIBIT ADM. DOWNES' PORTRAIT IN HIGHLAND PARK WOMAN'S CLUB

Adm. Downes' Portrait.

Painted as a companion piece to the portrait of Adm. Downes' great-grandfather, Commodore John Downes, it will hang by its side above the Downes' mantel at Great Lakes. The modern oil is painted after the style of Sully, early 19th century painter of Commodore Downes, who also was the creator of the familiar "Washington Crossing the Delaware."

Straub studied in the Academie Julien in Paris and in the Cincinnati Art academy with Frank Duveneck. The work of other Highland Park artists also is on display.

STANDS ON NORTH SIDE READY FOR DIMES SHOWER

Local community talent, together with radio, stage, and screen actors are on the entertainment program at Mile of Dimes stands on the north side. Stands are located at Davis street and Orrington avenue, Evanston, and at Lincoln, Belmont, and Ashland avenues.

The Evanston campaign is under the chairmanship of Ald. Elmer E. Nilles. The booth at Lincoln, Belmont, and Ashland avenues is sponsored by the Lincoln-Belmont-Ashland Business association and is supervised by C. J. Moser.

Quota for this year's campaign at the latter stand has been set at $5,000. Last year the Lincoln avenue stand raised more than $4,000. The Evanston booth is a new departure for that community; heretofore, funds were collected mostly thru individual solicitations.

Both stands are equipped with milk bottles representing states of the union, into which passersby may drop their donations. Helpers carry containers to catch all other stray coins.

Orphans Given Scrapbook of Comic Friends

The boys and girls out at the Bensenville Evangelical Orphan home soon will be reviewing Dick Tracy's adventures for last year, going back to re-read what Orphan Annie did in January, 1942, and checking up on the year's activities of Terry and the Pirates.

They'll be able to do all that with the scrapbook just completed for them by Mrs. Irvin C. Rodin, 2041 Bradley place. She has bound into two volumes all THE TRIBUNE comic books and comic sections for 1942, and is giving them to the orphan's home.

Started by Her Father.

The job was started early last year by Mrs. Rodin's father, Louis G. Laechelt Sr. He enjoyed the comics so much himself he felt they should be saved to give pleasure to some one else. But he lived only a few weeks after starting the scrapbooks, so Mrs. Rodin decided to carry on the job her father had begun.

Mrs. Rodin is a member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Bensenville Orphanage, and has done much work with the youngsters there. She doesn't make as many trips out to Bensenville since gasoline rationing, and will send the scrapbooks to the children with the Rev. Harry Brueckner, pastor of the Epiphany Evangelical church, Bradley place and Damen avenue.

Elderly Fans, Too.

The 90 children at the home won't be the only ones who will enjoy the big cardboard bound scrapbook and the smaller volume of bound comic books. Mrs. Rodin has a hunch that the elderly people in the nearby Old People's home will get almost as much pleasure from Gasoline Alley and Winnie Winkle and Brenda Starr as the children.

Church Holds Jubilee Today for 90th Year

Simple festivities, in the spirit of wartime, will mark the 90th anniversary of Immanuel Lutheran church, 1510 Elmdale avenue, today. The Rev. Theodore E. Matson, regional director of home missions of the Lutheran Augustana synod, will give the sermon at the 10:45 o'clock service. Dr. O. A. Benson, president of the Illinois conference of the synod and Dr. F. A. Johnsson, treasurer of the conference, will speak at the 5 o'clock anniversary vesper service. Supper and a social hour, following the service, will complete the day's program.

The Rev. C. O. Bengtson.

Immanuel church was organized in 1843 by a small group of Swedish immigrants. Dr. Erland Carlsson, who arrived from Sweden the same year, became the church's first pastor. His pastorate continued for 22 years.

Church Razed in Great Fire.

In 1868, the church's membership had outgrown the original edifice on Superior street between La Salle and Wells streets, and a larger building was erected at Sedgwick and Hobbie streets, the next year. However, less than two years later, the church was burned in Chicago's great fire. Church records were saved from destruction by a parishioner who was calm enough to load them all on a wheelbarrow and cart them to safety.

The fire left 320 of the 340 church families homeless. Almost all were penniless, and the debt on the burned building was $22,000, which the congregation voted to pay rather than to declare bankruptcy. So, on April 4, 1875, a new building—almost identical with the former one—was dedicated. The new church was made possible by gifts from Lutheran churches thruout the country, contributions from churches in Sweden, and money given by members of the local church.

Move to New Location.

For years following, the church had one of the largest congregations in Chicago. By 1918, however, a large majority of its members had moved to outlying districts on the north side and a new location for the church was found desirable. The congregation merged, at that time, with the Bethel Lutheran church of Edgewater and, in 1921, the present building on Elmdale avenue was erected. The building at Sedgwick and Hobbie streets was turned over to the Illinois conference. In 1936 it was destroyed by fire.

Dr. C. O. Bengston is present pastor. He began his pastorate in 1919. Forty-nine active members of the congregation and 21 associate members are now serving in the army and navy.

Long time members of the church are Mrs. G. P. Johnson, 86 years old; Mrs. Emmy Evald, 85 years old, daughter of the first pastor; Walter Wilson, and Mrs. Dorothea Holmberg, both 80 years old, whose membership goes back more than 70 years.

Mr. Edington, a speech school student, will be starred as the dreamy Mr. Popper, whose lack of paperhanging work in the winter leads him to develop his aspirations as an Antarctic explorer and penguin trainer.

Other speech school and high school players who will take part in the production are: Helaine Stone, Richard Shattuck, Florence Schram, Jack Colt, and Stanley Harrison.

ASKS RADIONICS BE USED INSTEAD OF ELECTRONICS

American Term Is Called More Descriptive.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Dr. Arthur F. Van Dyck, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, has suggested that "radionics" is a better word than "electronics." Electronics is of British origin and long has been widely used. More recently radionics has been introduced in America. Dr. Van Dyck told the engineers at their membership dinner in Chicago that "radionics" is an apt term to describe this field of activity.

Both terms deal with the application of vacuum tubes in electrical circuits not only for broadcasting and other radio communications, but to radio receivers, television, photoelectric units, rectifiers, phonographs, hearing aids, and many other allied items.

Radionics More Descriptive.

Last week E. F. McDonald Jr., the Chicago radio developer and manufacturer, seconded the move of Dr. Van Dyck.

"Most of the leaders of the radio industry to whom I have talked feel that the American term 'radionics' is more descriptive and less confusing to the public," he said.

"Radionics in my opinion," he continued, "is a word fit to describe the miracles now being wrought behind secret panels of laboratories for the winning of the war."

"Much to the Point."

"Radionics springs from the Latin 'to radiate,'" according to McDonald, "and from the Greek 'ion' [to wander or travel], and thus we get the term 'wandering or traveling radiations' which is much to the point and extremely descriptive.

"Electronics springs from the Greek root meaning 'amber' which was discovered to have certain properties when rubbed. Therefore I take it that electronics is wandering amber. Is that descriptive?

"The term 'electron' is of British origin, having been first used by C. J. Stoney in 1891. Since we did not adopt the British words petrol, underground, bobby, pup, valve, and wireless—instead using the Americanisms gasoline, subway, policeman, saloon, tube, and radio—why should we adopt the word electronics?"

'MIGHTIER THAN SWORD' TO TELL SINGAPORE FALL

The story of Japanese fifth column activities coupled with international intrigue, which caused the downfall of Singapore, will be told by Stanley Johnston on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program to be broadcast on W-G-N from 8:30 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, was told the story by a Chinese evacuée after the fall of Singapore. At that time Johnston was on assignment on the west coast, waiting to join the American fleet in the Pacific.

The program will show how the Japanese gained control of public thought by influencing censorship of stories leaving Singapore for newspapers in countries all over the world.

Another factor contributing to the success of the Japanese attack was the work of one particularly ruthless feminine spy.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La Frandre. Laurette Fillbrandt will play the leading rôle on this week's program.

'MARTHA' TO BE PRESENTED ON THEATER OF AIR

"Martha," von Flotow's best known opera, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 next Saturday evening. This show is broadcast over W-G-N, W59C and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

Marion Claire, noted soprano, and Eugene Conley, young tenor of the San Carlo Opera company, will be starred.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, will be the speaker of the evening.

Kenneth MacGregor, chief of production for W-G-N, has prepared a special radio version of the opera that retains both the story and the important musical selections.

Miss Claire will portray the rôle of Lady Harriet of Queen Anne's court in Hampton, England, who drops her rank and changes her name to Martha. Conley will be cast as a farmer, Lionel, later disclosed as heir to the earldom of Derby.

A complete dramatic cast will portray the speaking rôles of the opera. Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. A supporting singing cast also will be presented on the show.

Best known aria of the opera is "The Last Rose of Summer."

Melton Will Be Guest on Kostelanetz Show Today

James Melton will sing Gershwin's "It Ain't Necessarily So" on the Andre Kostelanetz program at 3:30 this afternoon over WBBM-CBS. Another guest will be Vicente Gomez, guitarist. "The Man I Love" will be played by the orchestra.

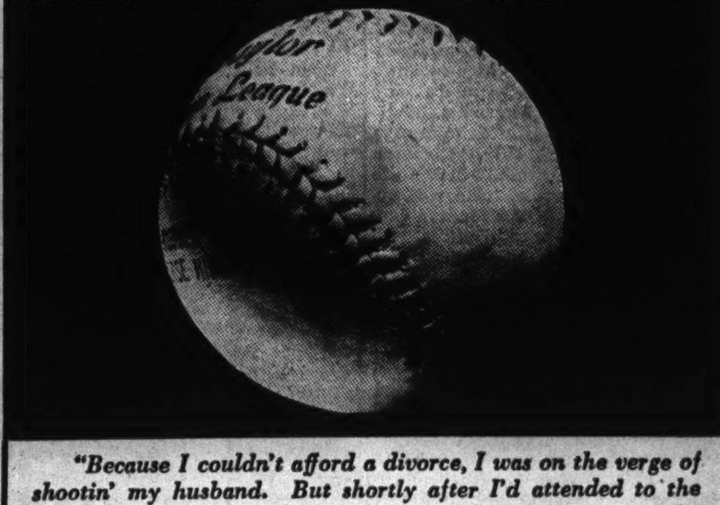
MURDER STOPPED BY BASEBALL!



"Because I couldn't afford a divorce, I was on the verge of shootin' my husband. But shortly after I'd attended to the details of picking out my widow's weeds, I went to see the Cubs play ball . . ."

And that, just that, timely attendance on Ladies' Day at the Cubs' ball park, is why the lady didn't get a six months' contract in vaudeville! But here, dear readers and relatives, cast your orbs on the lurid letter Anonymous, from Evanston, sent us, in reply to our appeal for a certain J. G. whose wife is afflicted with snoring.

"My mate, whom I'd vowed to love, honor and obey till death do us part, was about to be parted from this world 'cause of his midnight braying that labored until break of day. Believe me, if those harsh bugle calls and grating trumpet notes that emanated from his elephantine bazoo could have been broadcast at night, every light in every house in the world would have gone on! Sheer desperation had forced me to become an avid reader of every crime magazine. One diabolical plot after another whizzed through my brain!

"Then came the day at the Cubs' ball park. I went home that night, and an idea struck me like a bombshell! The next day I hunted up a sporting goods store and bought a baseball. I took one of my husband's pajama tops and sewed a pocket on its back. In this pocket I placed a baseball, and that night I made him wear it. A miracle happened. HE STOPPED SNORING! I had tried in vain to stop him from sleeping on his back, figuring this must be the real cause of his snoring. But the baseball placed in a pocket in the back of his pajama top did the trick when everything else had failed."

And they lived scrappily ever after. And will you be happy, as happy as can be with your first SUN-GLO from that gorgeous litt'l palace of modern laundering science, located right in the heart of the Skokie Valley! Will ya? We'll say!

Mrs. Irene Prentice of 1953 Leland avenue announces the engagement of her daughter, Dianne Valerie, to John W. Hackett Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hackett, 4538 North Hermitage avenue. Mr. Hackett is stationed at Northwestern university in the army signal corps.

WOMAN INVITES AIRCADETS TO HIT HOUSE IF IT HELPS

An invitation to "knock a few bricks off our chimney" has been sent to navy air cadets in training at the Glenview naval air station by Mrs. Ruth Engel of Palatine.

"I live about two blocks from the auxiliary landing field, Buffalo Grove," she wrote to Comm. G. A. T. Washburn, commanding officer at Glenview. "When the boys are practicing landings, they fly about 150 feet [my guess, of course] over our home. I want you to tell the pilots that this is too high to suit me. If in their training it will help them, they are welcome to roll their wheels along the roof—just so long as they don't hurt themselves."

Mrs. Engel's letter was inspired by protests over the low flying done by aviators in training at the station.

She continued, "You see, I have come to realize what an excellent symphony the roar of these motors is—especially as it grows louder each day as the number of planes increases. I know that these are the planes and the pilots who without a second thought would chase a Zero or Messerschmitt away from my home—even at the cost of their lives."

Cadets reading Mrs. Engel's invitation to knock off the bricks and roll along the roof of her house were cautioned, however, not to take the offer too seriously.

"But we thank Mrs. Engel for her letter.

ST. GEORGE HIGH IS HONOR SCHOOL ON W-G-N TODAY

Evanston Principal to Tell of War Activities.

St. George High school of Evanston will be honored at 1 o'clock this afternoon on "Citizens of Tomorrow," weekly program over station W-G-N sponsored by THE TRIBUNE in honor of Chicagoland high schools.

Brother I. Patrick, F. S. C., principal, will speak briefly on what his school is doing to help win the war. He will point to the 400 graduates of St. George already serving in the army and navy, and he will tell how the school is preparing its undergraduates for their job in the war.

The 55 members of the senior class glee club, under the direction of Brother Bertram, music supervisor, will sing the St. George loyalty song, "On Great Lone Hills" by Sibelius and "Ave Maria" by Tresch.

St. George's honor student, Bernard J. Ahern, 3752 North Central Park avenue, will be interviewed by Philip Maxwell, master of ceremonies.

Students Attend Recording.

The program which will be heard today was recorded last Wednesday afternoon in the St. George school gymnasium with the entire student body of 650 boys in attendance. Preceding the half hour program recording the school flag and national colors were posted. Students pledged allegiance to the flag and joined in singing the "Star Spangled Banner."

Since the outbreak of war, St. George's curriculum has been adapted to wartime needs. From its student group is being selected a squadron of army flyers, to be known as the "Dragon squadron," after the name used to distinguish its athletic teams.

Faculty Studies First Aid.

The entire faculty is enrolled in a Red Cross first aid course, and the school plant has been designated a war emergency casualty station.

Also honored on the program will be Thomas Corlett of Oskaloosa, Ia.

LAKE VIEW BOYS CLUB WILL OPEN NEW QUARTERS

With paint brushes, hammers, and hard work, members of the Lake View "Y" Boys' club of the Lincoln-Belmont Y. M. C. A., 3333 North Marshfield avenue, have completed their new club rooms at 911 School street. The formal opening of the new quarters will take place at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening. James Archer is director of the club, working under supervision of Arthur E. Brubaker, boys' secretary of the Lincoln-Belmont Y. M. C. A.

The increasing number of boys and activities in the organization made it necessary to move the club rooms from 3400 Sheffield avenue to the basement of a store building on School street in order to provide adequate space for the club program.

In the new quarters, there are two club rooms where the individual boys groups may hold their meetings. There also is room for carrying on the club's extensive craft program and space for table games.

COUNCIL FIGHT IN 20TH IS WEST SIDE HIGHLIGHT

Democrats Hope to Take Pacelli Seat.

Speculation as to who will succeed the late William V. Pacelli, who represented the 20th ward in the city council for five terms until his death last November, was the chief item of interest in the aldermanic campaigns on the west side last week. Comparatively few candidates have filed their nominating petitions but a deluge is expected before Tuesday, the deadline.

Pacelli, a Republican and former state representative, has been succeeded by Michael Francisco in the post of 20th ward committeeman. Anthony Mordente, 771 De Koven street, former secretary to Pacelli, has been indorsed by the Republican organization as an aldermanic candidate.

May Elect Democrat.

The 20th has traditionally voted Democratic in general elections, however, and there is a strong possibility it may elect a Democrat in the aldermanic election Feb. 23. Anthony Pistilli, 1106 South Ashland avenue, 35 years old, a precinct captain for 14 years, has been indorsed by the Democratic organization. Peter Fosco, a county commissioner, is the Democratic ward committeeman.

Fights also are expected in the 36th and 37th wards, which have Democratic aldermen but which have been voting Republican in the most recent mayoral, gubernatorial, and senatorial elections. Richard M. Walsh, the 36th ward incumbent who beat out George W. Robinson in a runoff four years ago, has been indorsed by the Democratic organization. No Republican has filed for his candidacy as yet. This ward voted for Green for mayor in 1939, Green for governor in 1940, and Brooks for senator in 1942. Lyons almost won the senatorial race there in 1938.

Democrats Indorsed Callaghan.

Francis E. Callaghan, who succeeded Roger J. Kiley when the latter became a Superior court judge in 1941, is finishing his first term as alderman in the 37th ward and has been indorsed by the Democratic organization to run again. Callaghan also is the Democratic committeeman in the ward. Francis A. Horrigan, the Republican committeeman, has not disclosed who the organization will indorse. The Republicans carried the ward in the last four elections.

If no candidate receives a majority of the votes in the Feb. 23 election, the two highest will meet in a runoff April 6.

TWENTIETH — An old stamping ground for gangsters, this ward has been famous locally as the "bloody 20th." It covers two square miles and its population of 55,043 includes many foreign language groups—principally Italians, Jews, Greeks, Lithuanians, and Bohemians. William V. Pacelli was alderman of the ward from 1929 until his death last November. Pacelli also was Republican ward committeeman, a position which now is held by Michael Francisco. Peter Fosco, county commissioner, is the Democratic committeeman. Green almost won the ward in his gubernatorial race in 1940 but the 20th has gone Democratic in the last four elections.

TWENTY-FIRST—Much the same racial makeup as the 20th exists here. The ward was once ruled by former Mayor Anton J. Cermak, a native Bohemian, and the neighborhood of 18th and Loomis streets is known as Little Pilsen, since it is the center of one of the largest concentrations of Chicago's 200,000 citizens of Bohemian extraction. The population in its 2.5 square miles dwindled from 69,768 in 1930 to 57,312 in 1940. Joseph F. Ropa, a Kelly Democrat, won his second term as alderman in 1939, when he defeated John J. Phillips, a Courtney Democrat. He first entered office when he was elected to fill the expiring term of J. J. LaGodney, who died in 1936 after a year as alderman. The ward is consistently strong Democratic territory.

TWENTY-SECOND—This was the home ward of Cermak and also contains large groups of Bohemian-Americans. In 1940 its two square miles had a population of 48,602. The ward is largely residential and includes in its southeast corner the Bridewell and the contagious disease hospital. Farther north is the prosperous Douglas park district. The aldermanic berth has been vacant since Henry Sonnenschein left that post after three terms when he was elected Superior court clerk last fall. Sonenschein, who for 22 years was Cermak's secretary, is still Democratic committeeman in the ward. Fred M. Gillies of Inland Steel company is the new G. O. P. committeeman to succeed the late Anthony L. Golusinski. The ward customarily votes Democratic.

TWENTY-THIRD — Many of the ward's 48,351 residents are employed at the Western Electric company just across the city's west boundary. They keep alive Bohemian, Polish, German,

Feeding Army Changes Life for 'Y' Cooks

"We're in the army now!" say the employés of the YMCA at 1804 Congress street as they serve a steaming army breakfast at 5:30 o'clock in the morning to the earliest classes of the soldier students quartered in the Y building. Group after group follows from the eight floors of residence rooms to eat and then march to the Coyne Electrical school for instruction. The cooks barely get the breakfast cleared and the regulation noon menu under way before the "predawn" classes are swinging back for lunch.

Capt. Harry Simmons.

The detachment of the Signal Corps Training school is made up of men whose aptitudes, civilian background, and training indicate exceptional possibilities as operators, electricians, radio mechanics, or electrical engineers. The course runs from 9 to 13 weeks. Besides mess and quarters, the West Side Professional Schools YMCA provides social and recreational activities, lounges, the gymnasium and its equipment.

Represent Varied Backgrounds.

Soldiers are sent here from army camps in all parts of the nation. As former civilians they represent many occupations. One was manager of a department store, another a bank president. Several have been owners of electrical and radio shops, many have been graduated by technical schools. One is a doctor of philosophy from the University of West Virginia, several others are entertainers and artists, including an opera singer.

Corp. Chanan Singh was born and received his early schooling in northern India as a Hindu. He later became a Christian, came to this country, was graduated by Stanford university, and married an American girl. He has written several articles on life of the American people compared with the Hindus. Pvt. Roy L. Bradley started soldiering in 1905 at Manila and has a son who is a sergeant at another post.

Commander a Chicagoan.

The five officers of the detachment have come, respectively, from the cavalry, the infantry tank, the signal corps, the adjutant general's office, and the field artillery. The commanding officer is Capt. Harry D. Simmons, a native Chicagoan whose sun-tanned countenance and military bearing bespeak his army training. He has visited many cities, now axis dominated, including Shanghai, Hongkong, and Singapore. In 1922 he was the first National A.A.U. welterweight boxing champion, representing the Gary YMCA. He was stationed at Camp Grant for 18 months before his transfer to Chicago.

The executive officer, Lt. Leslie J. Bartlett, was born 24 hours too soon to share the heroic action of the 192d tank battalion on Bataan. He was too old by one day to remain with the organization when it left for the Philippines. Lt. Edward H. Doughty is special services, operations, and training officer. He couldn't fight in the last war because the death of his wife left him alone to care for six small children. But for 27 years Lt. Doughty was a member of the Maine and Illinois National Guard while working as a factory superintendent and at other times as chef to assist his two daughters and four sons thru college. The daughters are doing Red Cross work, and of the four sons, one is a marine, one is in the army, and two are in the navy.

Had CCC Training.

Lt. Anson L. Lovellette is personnel officer. His nine years in all phases of the Civilian Conservation corps have proven excellent experience for his administrative duties now. Lt. Thomas H. Davis is supply and transportation officer. He was a marine back in 1927-'29. As a civilian postoffice clerk, he chose marksmanship as a hobby, and now wears army bars for proficiency in rifle, pistol, and field artillery.

Their heavy schedule of classes, study, strenuous exercises, and drills does not prevent the men from planning activities of inspiration and recreation. They appreciate the opportunity to participate with the Y staff in volleyball and basketball games, boxing and wrestling, music, movies, and parties with the nurses.

Y Executive Was in China.

Charles C. Shedd, executive secretary of the Y, is an active church layman. His nearly 30 years of experience includes the 10 years he was "loaned" by the American YMCA to the Chinese Y, when he served in Hankow, Peking, Wuchang, and Chungking. "We are doing all in our power to make their residence and recreation contribute the most to their technical training. Their rôle of communications experts is of utmost importance in the war effort," Shedd said of the soldiers.

The Y.M.C.A. is retaining its own personnel thruout the coöperative operations. Norman R. Fielder, who served in the navy in 1918, is the program director for the Y. For years he conducted an extensive program with the medical, dental, and pharmaceutical students and nurses in training who resided at the Y building prior to the arrival of the detachment.

Mrs. Marie E. Drelis, manager of the Y's food service, works in coöperation with Capt. Simmons and his staff in preparing and serving the regulation army menus set up by the Sixth Service command. Mrs. Drelis says there is not one jaded appetite

Learn Ways of the Sea at Neighborhood House

GIRL MARINERS LACK BOAT BUT NOT ENTHUSIASM

10 in Scout Unit Learn Seamanship.

If the WAVES are looking for any future material, they should be sure to check on the good ship Sovereign of the Seas, at its home port of Howell Neighborhood House, 1831 South Racine avenue.

The ship isn't like any other ship, with a prow, sails, or rudder. It is a group of Girl Scout Mariners, the feminine counterpart of the Sea Scouts. The troop at Howell House is one of few, for the Mariners movement is still comparatively new.

The girls began their organization last spring, after they found out that Mariners were senior Girl Scouts with a special interest in a water program. John Waring, who reports yachting for THE TRIBUNE, spoke to the girls at one meeting, telling them about the weather, its quirks, and how to foretell it. That was so much fun that one of the girls came to meeting the next time bringing a barometer and a hygrometer, which she had seen often at school, and wanted to know more about.

10 Get Mariner Pins.

The troop was registered last April 27, and 10 girls were invested as full fledged Girl Scout Mariners, and received their Mariner pins. They had to be at least 15 years old, able to swim 100 yards, to tread water for 60 seconds, know the Girl Scout promise, laws, and motto, have attended four meetings, and pass the physical examination.

Those girls had been hard at work at the swimming pool for weeks, passing the various tests. Some of the candidates are still stuck at the 100 yard swimming requirement, but it won't be long before they're seaworthy enough to come aboard the ship.

The ship elects two "officers of the day," who act for a month. There is a yeoman, too, who keeps records of the ship's course. The midshipmite rank is the first goal of the Mariner. When she has achieved this, she receives a guard to wear on her pin. Following this, she works to become a jack tar, a seaman, and finally an old salt.

Get Seamanship Lessons.

By that time she will have received instructions as to charting the course of a water craft, knowledge of the different types of boats and the rules for their use, Junior Red Cross life saving instruction, rules of the sea such as lights, buoys, and other skills which would make her able to handle a boat.

The group does not own, nor at present have full access to a boat, but they are hoping for a chance to practice on one owned by somebody else.

Uniforms were their first project, outside of the regular Mariner activities. Together, the girls earned most of the money to purchase the uniforms.

The ship doesn't proceed on its course without leadership. The skipper, Florence Ray, and the pilot committee or sponsors give the group the support and confidence which makes the ship possible. Mrs. A. R. Morrow, Mrs. F. R. Henninger, Mrs. Arthur B. Hall, and Mrs. Harold Elliot comprise the pilot committee.

Pick Name of Famous Steamer.

The Sovereign of the Seas was one of the first steamships to cross the Atlantic. When the girls held a contest to choose their ship name, each girl brought in the name and story of a ship which interested her. But when this name was brought up, it was voted on unanimously, because "we are all working to be the 'Sovereign of the Seas!'"

OUR TOWN

RAYMOND J. WENTZEL, son of John Wentzel, 2424 Van Buren street, has returned to Chicago after several years' absence, to work on a novel in collaboration with Pascal Lancio, scenario writer and novelist. Wentzel attended west side schools and in 1936 went to New Orleans, where he met Lancio and later became his secretary.

While writing his novel Wentzel is working during the day in a production control department of a south side concern. He is studying at the Lawson Y. M. C. A., 30 West Chicago avenue. His sister is Mrs. Arthur Brunsvold, 12 South St. Louis avenue, who sings under the professional name of Jeanne La Mere.

Phylliss Federson, 1235 North Parkside avenue, is a member of the 26 piece orchestra which accompanied the 158 voices in the Monmouth college presentation of "The Messiah" recently. Miss Fedderson plays the trombone.

Members of the family of Richard Armato of Maywood have received word that he is a prisoner of the Japanese in the Philippine Islands. Before entering the army Armato was associated with the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago for 12 years. Another brother, Melchoir, also is with the army and is overseas.

HOPE TO KEEP NEW PLAN IN LOCAL HANDS

Stress Many Benefits for Suburbs.

Defense transportation chairmen have been named in communities in the Chicago metropolitan area to organize the new share-the-ride campaign inaugurated under joint sponsorship of the area offices of civilian defense and defense transportation.

A home to home survey, to ask all Chicagoland automobile owners to become members of group riding clubs, will be planned this week by these OCD volunteers at meetings in civilian defense headquarters thruout the city and suburbs.

Territory covered by the campaign extends from Waukegan on the north to Steger and South Chicago Heights on the south, and as far west as Naperville and Wheaton.

Broad Program in Suburbs.

In Chicago, where local transit facilities are extensive, the campaign will stress group riding to and from work.

Among the 118 suburban communities included in the area the campaign will be broader in scope, covering group riding to commuter trains, to school, to church, to clubs, and for shopping. This is due to the general lack of adequate transportation facilities in many towns.

During the course of the campaign, OCD personnel will ask every auto driver not already participating in a group riders' club to register as a prospective member.

Each motorist who registers gives his name, address, place of employment or other destination, hours of work or travel, and the capacity of his automobile. OCD volunteers will then determine groupings for each individual and advise him of others with the same hours, destination, etc.

Adopt Highland Park Plan.

The Highland Park share-the-ride plan, conceived last January by a north shore commuter, and developed there last year, has been chosen by Charles E. DeLeuw, area ODT coadministrator, as a model for the 118 other suburban communities.

Copies of a booklet outlining the methods and results of the Highland Park group riding plan have been mailed to OCD transportation committees.

"Many persons are now sharing their cars alternately in driving to and from work," De Leuw said. "These active group riders include employés of more than 650 war factories in the Chicago area. But in view of the serious shortage of rubber and the shortage of repair parts for automobiles there are still too many motorists driving alone."

Saves Tires and Autos.

"By stepping up the average load factor of each car to four or five persons the wear and tear on private automobile tires may be reduced by 75 or 80 per cent," he stated.

Major objectives of the campaign are:

Conservation of tires now on private autos.

Curtailment of nonessential driving.

Prevention of a breakdown in local transportation, thru greater use of automobiles.

Take Turns Driving.

When three car owners form a group each has his turn driving the others in his car one week out of every three. The other two weeks his car is not used. If the group consists of four or five, each auto operates even fewer weeks.

The share-the-ride plan completes the list of measures devised so far to curtail use of rubber. These measures include mileage [gasoline] rationing, staggered hours, revised routes and schedules, and the national 35 mile an hour speed limit.

Edward C. Schneider, 4511 Madison street, is defense transportation chairman in division 4 of the Chicago metropolitan area OCD. The organization of the 800,000 to 1,000,000 population in his division is complicated by the 26 foreign language groups residing there. Members of his committee include the following community transportation chairmen:

Dr. M. M. Robin, 3541 Van Buren street, East Garfield; Harvey H. Firestone, 531 North Homan avenue, West Town; Alfred Baumgartel, 3855 Washington boulevard, West Garfield; Bert Bartelson, 4845 Gladys avenue, South Austin; Al Weger, 335 North Lockwood avenue, Central Austin; H. F. Snell, 941 North Leclaire avenue, North Austin; Joseph Cozzi, 2222 Taylor street, Medical Center.

Jerry J. Viterna, transportation chairman for the Cicero area, has not announced his chairmen. His area on the west side includes Cicero, Berwyn, Stickney, Forest View, North Riverside, Riverside, Brookfield, Lyons, La Grange Park, La Grange, Western Springs, and Hodgkins.

and Yugo-Slav traditions thru group activities. The ward embraces three square miles. Joseph Kacena Jr., who for 12 years was chief of the sanitary district police, is in his second term as alderman. A Democrat, he succeeded John Toman, who had held the job for 23 years, in the 1935 election. Toman now is a member of the board of tax appeals. William Lass is the Republican committeeman. The ward is controlled by the Democrats.

TWENTY-FOURTH—This ward is a center of Jewish life in Chicago and includes the better class apartment and residential area just west of Douglas park. It contains 59,501 persons, according to the 1940 census. The ward is 1.3 square miles in area. Fred Fischman is the alderman, having been chosen in a special election to succeed Jacob M. Arvey, who now is a lieutenant in the army. Arvey, a power in Democratic circles, had been alderman since 1923 and the ward has polled few Republican votes in recent elections. Fischman also is the Democratic committeeman and Paul W. Rothberg, member of the state liquor control commission, is the G. O. P. committeeman.

TWENTY-FIFTH—This section includes large industrial areas and residential neighborhoods, with foreign language groups mingled with large blocs of Irish-Americans. The ward's 2.4 square miles contained a population of 49,018 in 1940. James B. Bowler, 66 years old, has been alderman in the ward for 36 of the last 37 years and is president pro tem of the city council. Bowler also is Democratic committeeman. The Republican committeeman is William Parrillo, member of the state industrial commission. The ward has gone Democratic in recent elections.

TWENTY-SEVENTH—Starting at the river between Kinzie and Van Buren streets, the east end of the ward contains part of downtown Chicago. Immediately westward are cheap hotels and rooming houses but the residential character improves as it tapers off at Sawyer avenue between Washington and Madison streets. It was the scene of the Haymarket riot and it includes County hospital. The population was 59,869 at the time of the 1940 census. Henry L. Sain, an insurance partner of John J. Touhy, the ward committeeman and a sanitary district trustee, has been alderman since 1933. William J. Granata, an attorney, is the G. O. P. committeeman. The ward is largely Democratic.

TWENTY-EIGHTH—The home of Patrick A. Nash, long-time Democratic boss, the ward is bounded by Washington boulevard, Pulaski road, and Chicago and Ashland avenues. It embraces the north end of Garfield park with its conservatory, the largest in the country, and takes in residential areas to the east. The population in its 2.7 square miles declined from 71,568 in 1930 to 65,126 in 1940. George D. Kells, a protége of the late Roger C. Sullivan, a powerful Democratic political leader, is finishing his fourth term as alderman. Nash is the committeeman, in addition to being chairman of the Cook County Central Democratic committee. The ward went Democratic in the last three elections.

TWENTY-NINTH — This ward, which had 59,225 persons in its 1.58 square miles in 1940, embraces the south end of Garfield park with the surrounding better class apartment and residential areas. It is the home of the main Sears, Roebuck company plant, as well as some leading political figures, including Al Horan, chief bailiff of the Municipal court; Robert E. Crowe, judge in the Circuit court, and the late Robert M. Sweitzer. Horan is Democratic committeeman and Louis J. Meyers is Republican committeeman. Joseph S. Gillespie, who won out over Thomas J. Terrell, a three-term alderman, in 1939, is finishing his first term as alderman. The ward is heavily Democratic.

THIRTIETH—This ward includes three square miles and had a population of 66,703 in 1940. It extends both north and south of the Northwestern railroad yards at Chicago avenue and Pulaski road and is a fairly even mixture of single family dwellings and apartments. It is the home of Edward F. Moore, former chairman of the Cook County Central Republican committee, and John S. Clark, county assessor. Moore is the G. O. P. committeeman and Edward J. Upton is the Democratic committeeman. The latter has been alderman since he succeeded his friend, Clark, in 1935. The ward voted Democratic in recent elections.

THIRTY-SIXTH—There were 71,528 residents in this ward's five square miles in 1940. It contains the old Cragin section and a high percentage of better class homes. Richard Walsh, who beat out George W. Robinson in 1939, after Robinson had been alderman since 1933, is finishing his first term. Robinson now is Democratic committeeman. The Republican committeeman is Eden T. Brekke, former park commissioner.

THIRTY-SEVENTH—This ward includes the staid old Austin section, whose social and cultural life revolves around the old Austin town hall. It has an unusually high proportion of single family dwellings and much high grade apartment territory. Columbus park is at the south end of the ward, which in 1940 had 70,250 residents in its three square miles. Francis E. Callaghan is finishing his first term as alderman.

ZONE ORDINANCE CHANGES FACE OF WEST SIDE AREAS

Cuts Apartment House Districts Sharply.

A drastic revision of the old zoning ordinance approved recently by the city council will make wholesale changes on the west side in the areas in which more than two family dwellings are permitted. In many districts the area allowed for commercial purposes also is sharply reduced.

Where apartment house construction is still permitted, the ordinance requires that automobile storage space be provided on the basis of one automobile for every third apartment in the building. Theaters, dance halls and other places of amusement also are required to provide parking space in the same block in which they are located.

Business Types Limited.

Even where the commercial districts, as defined under the old ordinance, are nott disturbed, the type of business permitted is limited in many cases to small stores and professional offices. The more intensive commercial use areas have been placed as far as possible from residential zones. Under the old ordinance uses permitted in commercial areas ranged from small shops to light manufacturing.

The new plan has placed the heavy industrial areas in isolated positions, well away from residential districts. Except for caretakers and watchmen, homes are not permitted within any area designated as an industrial or manufacturing district.

Business areas, under the new law, are generally placed at the intersections of main thorofares, instead of spreading along even sparsely settled streets as they did under the old plan. In only a few cases is any manufacturing area allowed to front on a main artery of travel.

Set Ground Limits.

The heights of loop and other commercial buildings is greatly reduced, as is the area of the lot which may be covered by any residential or commercial building. In family residence districts, the maximum ground area of all buildings is limited to 40 per cent of the area of a corner lot and 35 per cent of the area of any other lot. Apartment houses are limited to 40 per cent of the area of their lot.

The new ordinance provides nine use districts: single family residence districts, duplex or two family residence districts, group or row house districts, apartment house districts, specialty shop districts, business districts, commercial districts, manufacturing districts, and industrial districts.

Rezone Large Area.

A large area between Hastings street and 15th street, from South Wood to Halsted streets, was formerly zoned for manufacturing but is now limited to apartment houses and other dwellings. A good portion of the area along Damen avenue between Pershing road and Roosevelt road in which commercial districts were permitted is now limited to one and two family homes. Wherever possible thruout this district the land has been rezoned from apartment houses to homes.

As is true all over the city, the greatest change brought about on the west side of the city by the new zoning regulations is the change from apartment house districts to one and two family residence areas.

Sergt. Pryatel was shown in a group of American soldiers somewhere in India. He was depicted charming a cobra, using a horn such as Hindu snake charmers use. Sergt. Pryatel, an optometrist in civilian life, enlisted in the army in 1940 from La Salle, Ill. His mother, Mrs. Mary Harvey, lives in Normal, Ill.

50 Years Together

Mr. and Mrs. Florian Grasso, 916 South Winchester avenue, have reached 50 years of married life. They celebrated their golden anniversary with their seven children, 19 grandchildren, and a number of relatives and friends.

If the outdoor bulb beds were not mulched [protected] do so before the spring thaws set in. Straw, free from weeds, coarse manure, litter of any kind, or glass wool may be used. Glass wool comes in small bales, costs more, but can be used for three years or more. Decayed manure when used as a mulch can be spaded or worked into the soil in spring.

Tuesday, Jan. 19.

It is nearing the time when some seeds should be sown to obtain good, strong plants for outdoor use. Lay in enough soil so it will be in prime condition for sowing. An excellent medium for sowing is two parts soil, two parts peat, and sufficient sand to insure porosity.

Wednesday, Jan. 20.

Gardeners who want to improve their surroundings with shrubs should not overplant. Key plants can be placed at their proper, mature distances and when the group needs rearranging these key plants can remain.

Thursday, Jan. 21.

Attention is again called to the use of the hotbed and coldframe. There is nothing among garden accessories that is more valuable.

See that all tools are in condition for early use. Give a coat of paint to all parts that can be painted. Sharpen hoes, spades, and lawn mower. Repair and paint garden furniture, birdhouses, garden seats, and clean statuary.

Tools kept in good condition make gardening much easier. The beginning gardener needs few tools, such as a good hoe, spade, or spading fork, garden line, and a trowel.

Friday, Jan. 22.

As the season advances, look over the perennial borders to rearrange the mulching materials that may have been placed over the crowns of plants. Plants that have persistent foliage are often smothered out.

Give house plants frequent syringing. The maximum of light should be given most house plants. Never overwater house plants but see that they are not permitted to dry out.

Saturday, Jan. 23.

Pot plants that are filled with roots may need repotting or an application of plant food. Pinch back weak growths to force a stronger growth from the base or lower down on the stems.

BROOKFIELD TOT HAS 'FAMILY' OF 100—ALL DOLLS

Relatives, Neighbors Add New Identities.

Barbara Van Cura, 5, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Van Cura, 3623 Prairie avenue, Brookfield, has more than 100 dolls to play with since Santa Claus visited her house on Christmas. She received six more this year.

As long as she can remember, Barbara has been surrounded by enough dolls to start a doll shop. Each one of them has given her a thrill, and she insists that, like a true mother, she adores no one of them more than another. Perhaps it all began because Barbara's mother, one of seven girls and boys in her own household, wanted dolls most of all at Christmas time and her longing was never quite fulfilled. Barbara is an only child.

Relatives Showed Interest.

So Mrs. Van Cura began collecting dolls for her daughter as soon as she was born. As with most persons who have hobbies, relatives and friends became interested and were thoughtful when they visited foreign lands.

One of the first dolls in the collection and one that is still highly prized was contributed by friends who visited Scotland. This doll, of course, wears Scotch plaid. There are many dolls representing different nationalities. Seven arrived from Mexico last year.

One doll, 26 years old, has a china head and was the gift of a neighbor who played with the doll as a girl. The various compositions of the dolls reveal how styles have changed thru the years. There is a novelty topsy-turvy doll from Tennessee that is reversible and has either a black or a white face, according to its possessor's choice.

One Is Tiny Mite.

The largest doll is 28 inches long, and the tiniest, less than an inch in size, must be kept in a transparent envelope lest it get lost. No two of the dolls are alike.

Both Mrs. Van Cura and Barbara have a laundry problem, or enjoyable pastime, keeping the doll dresses clean. None of the dolls have been broken. Some of them are kept on the mantle and in bookcases. Barbara likes to play with two or three of them at a time. Not all of the dolls have names. Many of them do, and many of them are known merely by their costumes.

One of Barbara's favorite games is lining up the dolls for "going to church." Barbara does the singing for them after they reach the choir loft. A few of the dolls can say "mama," but for the most part they are silent, and all of them are changeless in expression, except in the imagination of their owner.

Neighbors Share in Fun.

Neighbor children enjoy visiting the home to share in the play with the dolls. Twice in recent weeks, the dolls have been exhibited so that they might be more widely appreciated. During the holidays, 50 of the dolls were displayed at the Brookfield library, and a large collection of them was a feature of a local church hobby show.

Just before Christmas, Barbara was in a hospital and when she was recovering some of the dolls were sent to her bedside. Her family was made especially happy when Barbara found herself able to be home for the holidays and in the company of all her doll family.

Among the dolls brought to Barbara by Santa this Christmas was a Victory doll with a patriotic dress of red, white, and blue.

Stage Hospital Air Raid Drill

Install a New Staff of Officers Wednesday.

Homer Bale, a director of the Forest Park Chamber of Commerce, has been elected president of the organization and, with other new officers, will be installed Wednesday at the Forest Casino. The annual installation program will include a 6:30 o'clock dinner and floor show. Members of the association will give talks.

Mr. Bale, who came to the suburb five years ago to start the restaurant on Madison street known as "Homer's," immediately accepted civic responsibilities. He has been an active worker not only in the chamber proper but in the merchants' division. His election to the presidency of the business group came to him as a surprise and was the tribute of fellow business men who had appreciated his coöperative spirit.

Native of Mason City.

A native of Mason City, Ill., Mr. Bale for 12 years was associated with Cooley's Cupboards in Evanston as manager and buyer. One reason, perhaps, why Mr. Bale was unaware that new civic duties were about to be thrust upon him was that, around election time, he was absorbed with an event in his household, the birth of a baby girl, Susan Ann Bale.

Other Officers Named.

Fred Trage, just completing a term as president of the Oak Park Coöperative club, was elected first vice president of the Forest Park chamber. Charles Friedman was elected second vice president. Both men have long been active in the organization. Ray Cramer was reëlected treasurer. The new secretary is Fred Rose, township clerk.

Surgical Dressing Unit.

A new Provident hospital surgical dressing unit will hold its first all-day work meeting Tuesday in St. Stephen's church.

CHICAGO HOME OWNER MAKES MANY CHANGES

Helps by Doing Some of Work Himself.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Repair and remodel now. Keep your house functioning and conserve the supply of civilian goods by making things last as long as possible.

These are all watchwords of the day.

In 1937 he decided to begin to do some things for his five room brick bungalow at 7948 South Anthony. Now Mr. Fehr has a seven room bungalow, with three bathrooms instead of one, and an attic with several large rooms, all valuable, usable space since the upper floor is finished and the attic insulated. And a great deal of this work Mr. Fehr did himself.

Installed New Bath.

One of the first changes effected was to take space from the front hallway and bedroom and install a new bathroom. A new closet was built at an angle on the bedroom wall opposite the bath. This improvement has added an attractive bedroom and bath suite.

Later Mr. Fehr decided to add a third bedroom and bathroom at the back of the house and so for this he appropriated half of the rear porch and the old-fashioned pantry. Again a new closet was built at an angle in the outside wall. The new bathroom has yellow tile walls, black fixtures, a glass block window, and yellow accessories. The bedroom drapes and fittings are yellow and the furnishings blond.

New Recessed Shelves.

In the bedroom closets there are neatly placed shelves and racks for wardrobe needs. In the kitchen there are recessed shelves above the refrigerator and a nicely designed cabinet with mirrored shelves for house linens. A telephone niche has been placed in the hall between the dining room and kitchen, and in the bathrooms are recessed shelves for accessories.

TRAINING SCHOOL IN RELIGION WILL OPEN AT COLLEGE

The Community Training School of Religious Education for the west suburban area will convene tomorrow night at Elmhurst college for the first of a series of six Monday night sessions.

The Rev. Walter Luedtke of Hinsdale, dean of the school, will direct the sessions, starting at 7:30 o'clock. Thirty churches in the area are coöperating in the school, which leads to credits from the International Council of Religious Education.

This will be the 16th year for the school, which is expected to interest 150 registrants.

Hinsdale Outlines Ambitious Goals in War Aid Work

Mrs. Davis McMakin.

To collect more tin cans, rubber, greases, scrap, and paper than any comparable community, to conserve more in every way possible, to grow the most productive war gardens, share the most cars, and to keep physically fit at all times, are among the ambitious goals set forth in the carefully outlined 1943 service plans announced by Mrs. Davis McMakin, commander, and her various chairmen and committee members of the citizens service corps of Hinsdale's Civilian Defense council.

Hazen Dean, chairman of conservation and salvage, is assisted by Mrs. S. D. Forsythe, in charge of tin can collections; William A. Luthin, rubber salvage; Mrs. E. J. Kylen, greases; C. J. Symonds, paper, and Wendell Jackson, metals.

Special services and drives are to be conducted by Fred C. Morris, war gardens; Q. H. MacGregor, recreation; J. D. Matz, car sharing; H. J. Dickinson, physical fitness, and Mrs. Malcolm Hart, housing.

Mrs. McMakin, a resident of Hinsdale for 20 years, resides at 22 West 5th street. She is said to be a perfect sample of the adage: "The more you do, the more you can do." She is the mother of four boys, three of whom are aviators, and two daughters. She has been a member of the Hinsdale school board for six years, president of the Hinsdale Woman's club for two terms, an active figure in the Parent-Teachers' association, chairman of the aviation division of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, and vice president of the Du Page County Federation of Women's Clubs.

Now, as commander of the OCD Citizens Service corps, Mrs. McMakin has invited the coöperation of every member of the community to help her staff carry thru the comprehensive program of service for 1943.

STOP, GO LIGHTS PROMISED SOON AT 26TH, KEELER

The 23d ward has the promise of first consideration in installation of stop and go traffic lights four ways at 26th street and Keeler avenue, Ald. Joseph Kacena reported. The installation is expected to help continue the ward's 1942 record, which Kacena reported was the safest in the city.

An order for the installation has been approved by the city council, but this assures installation only when scarce materials are available, Kacena said.

The fourway lights will replace the two unlighted signs which now are supposed to stop 26th street traffic at Keeler avenue, a thru thorofare. Several car crashes have resulted at the intersection. Many pedestrians use the intersection, too, the alderman said, since a large church and school are located near by.

Establishment of 25 mile an hour speed limits on such important streets as Cermak road, Ogden avenue, 26th street, Pulaski road, and Kostner avenue in the last few years has helped to bring about the ward's safety record, Kacena said.

MAYWOOD CALL IS ACCEPTED BY REV. WHITEHOUSE

Plymouth Congregational church of Maywood has a new pastor, the Rev. Norman Whitehouse, formerly on the staff of Central church, Detroit, Mich., and more recently assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Evanston. He succeeds the Rev. Roy W. Merrifield, now pastor of a church at Urbana, Ill., after a six year pastorate at Maywood.

The Rev. Norman Whitehouse.

Born in Yorks, England, the Rev. Mr. Whitehouse was educated for the ministry in his native land as well as in the United States. He is a graduate of Albion college, Albion, Mich., and the law school of the University of Detroit. He has attended Garrett seminary and Seabury Western seminary.

Served Noted Pastors.

The Rev. Mr. Whitehouse was called to Detroit by the late Dr. Frederick D. Fisher, former Bishop of India. He served with Dr. Fisher at Central church in Detroit until Dr. Fisher's death and later with Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, one of America's outstanding pastors.

Mrs. Whitehouse, formerly a teacher of English and dramatics in the Albion, Mich., schools, was private secretary for Dr. Fisher in Detroit. Dr. Fisher, widely known for his knowledge of India, was a personal friend of Tagore and he wrote a biography of Gandhi.

The Rev. Mr. Whitehouse is the fourth pastor to serve Plymouth Congregational church in Maywood since its organization 15 years ago. His predecessors were the Rev. E. W. Miles, the Rev. William Halfacre, and the Rev. Roy W. Merrifield.

Plan New Church.

The church structure of Norman Gothic architecture was originally built as a chapel. There is a large lot east of the building at 5th avenue and Van Buren street on which, according to plans, the church proper eventually will be built. The present stone building has three floors. Downstairs there are church schoolrooms, and a large room for social fellowship. The third floor also provides church schoolrooms, and here there is a small stage that may be used for entertainments.

The Rev. Mr. Whitehouse has been active in Scouting and other youth programs. Both he and Mrs. Whitehouse express themselves as being highly enthusiastic about Maywood and their new parish.

PROGRAM SET UP TO TRAIN WOMEN FOR ENGINEERING

Under a plan to go into effect at the Illinois Institute of Technology in February, women will be given an opportunity to train for engineering positions and thus help meet what the war man power commission terms "the nation's most critical man power shortage." The program is believed to be the first of its kind in the nation.

Never before have women been encouraged to enroll in engineering; in fact, the number of women engineering students has been so limited that never has the census of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education on engineering enrollments included them. Last year there was a single women engineering student at Illinois tech; this year there are two.

Highlights of the program, as announced by President Henry T. Heald, are: [1] full time study; [2] a three semester program; [3] it will be offered on a block system, thus at the end of each semester the woman enrolled will be prepared to take some engineering post, but by continuing her studies she would be able to prepare for a more advanced job; [4] it will be open to any high school graduate; [5] it is designed for college credit work; and [6] it will be exclusively for women and only a limited number will be admitted.

Because of the urgency of the demand for engineers, women will go to school on a full time basis, being in class approximately 40 hours per week. In this way the maximum amount of training will be given in the shortest amount of time, Dr. Heald said.

OAK PARK YOUTH TELLS OF LIFE IN DARK CONTINENT

Former Air Club Member Now in Air Line Outpost.

Before O. A. Morard Jr. of Oak Park, was sent to Africa with Pan-American Airways-Africa, Ltd., he was one of the most active members of the Oak Park Aviation club. For a period he served as the club's president. His regard for the work that the club did in fitting its members for their present duties was told in a recent letter to Miss Josephine Blackstock, director of playgrounds for Oak Park, whose board sponsored the club. Morard told also in his letter of the interesting new mode of life he has encountered since his recent move. His letter, dated Oct. 16, "somewhere in Africa," follows:

"I've found the paper, pen, and time, after much pavlava [native for much talk] and am writing a much belated letter. We who belonged to the Oak Park Aviation club feel we owe so much to you for your help and faith in our organization that I feel it only right to keep you informed of what has become of some of the members who have traveled to far corners of the globe because of the present state of war.

Operate "Life Line."

"Since I left Oak Park, my position has taken me all thru the West Indies, South America, and now Africa. Here we have set up and are operating the vital aerial life line to the middle east. Many things will have to wait until after the war to be told. But it would do the people back home a world of good to learn of the great things the American people are capable of doing in a time of stress, and in strange countries with the greatest kind of obstacles staring them in the face.

"We have created a project over here that would rank high in the annals of aviation, and all with a limited amount of supplies and help, over strange terrain, fighting fevers and insects every step of the way.

"Somehow we have been able to conquer all, and it is my belief that, with that kind of energy and effort, the united nations will achieve their goal.

Life Pleasant, Help Cheap.

"Our live over here is rather pleasant—we have our movies, good American food, cigarets, excellent living quarters, and at present electric fans have been added. We hire natives to do the hard labor and wait on tables. We all have a houseboy at 20 cents a week to do our laundry, shine shoes, make our beds, chase flies and insects, and last but not least, to shovel the sand and dust out of the rooms. However, all these are results of much patience and effort on our part when we first arrived.

"So, now, with a sense of humor, one can almost enjoy the hot, strange, dark continent. And it is quite gratifying to see how grateful these people are for all the fine developments and advancements we have brought to these natives.

Gives Credit to Club.

"It may please you to know that I, and many others like myself, feel that we are now serving our country in its hour of need in a greater capacity by having organized and operated the Oak Park Aviation club, under your board's sponsorship. I find we are so much better informed and equipped to function in this aerial warfare as a result of our training at the club."

Morard is the son of Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Morard Sr., 907 North Oak Park avenue, Oak Park. He was formerly a senior instructor at the United States naval training school at Navy pier. The Morards have another son, Lieut. [j. g.] Robert J. Morard of the naval reserve, who has been on convoy duty.

DALE PRIMROSE, GLAMOR GIRL OF 4, LIKES HER JOB

BY MAURINE MYERS.

She's a glamor girl so far as the commercial photographers are concerned, but she'd still rather show you how she can stand on her head.

Dale Primrose, 4 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis C. Primrose, 334 Ashland avenue, River Forest, is an old hand at modeling before the commercial cameras. She's been doing it for a year and a half now. Soon her little sister Gloria, now just past two, will be standing before the lens, too, if the photographers take as much of a liking to her as they have to Dale.

Train Ride Exciting.

This business of having her picture taken several times each month is still just an exciting game to Dale—and so far as she knows it's the same sort of game every little girl enjoys when she's four years old. The most momentous part of the game is the train ride to the loop and back, and the lunch in a big loop restaurant. Sometimes, if she's a good girl and a lucky one, Mommy takes her to the toy department of one of the big department stores.

Photographers are a pretty good lot, Dale thinks. They play games with her and talk to her just like she was a grown up lady. But they do awfully funny things now and then. Like asking her to drink out of glass which doesn't have a thing in it. Or telling her to eat a slice of bread and butter when there isn't any bread and butter to eat. The funniest time was when she was in her bathing suit, and they asked her to sit on a table with her legs hanging over the edge, and pretend that little turtles were snapping at her toes.

Pretend Mommy and Daddy.

It was fun, too, when Mrs. Primrose took her down to the Pullman yards, where all the big trains are. There was a man and a lady there, and they had to pretend they were her Mommy and Daddy, and were all going away on a long, long ride on the train.

But the best fun of all was when they made pictures for the toy section of a big mail order catalog. There were more dolls and buggies and playthings than Dale had ever seen before. And the nicest thing was that they didn't say "Don't touch," like grownups have an annoying way of doing. They let her play with them as much as she wanted, and if they took any pictures, she didn't know about it.

Mrs. Primrose's favorite story is about the time there was a call for 10 boys and girls, to report in their oldest playclothes. The youngsters were pretending to be poor little ragamuffins, for a story illustration. While they posed in patched overalls and torn dresses, their mothers waited nearby, dressed in the same furs, feathered hats, and white gloves they always wore downtown for luncheon engagement. "Such a nice looking lot of mothers, waiting for such a ragged bunch of offspring!"

"Jobs" Are Plentiful.

Dale has had lots of "jobs" since her mother first took her to a models' agency back in April, 1941. Her cheerful little grin has helped sell butter, insurance, garden seeds, and chicken feed—and even tires back in the days before rationing. Her grandfather, O. P. Wodack, River Forest trustee, is proud of his photogenic grand-daughters—and his lodge magazine is apt to carry a little not whenever Dale's picture appears in print.

Dale has started to pre-school now—and when real school comes along next year it may cut in some on her "career."

ASKS RADIONICS BE USED INSTEAD OF ELECTRONICS

American Term Is Called More Descriptive.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Dr. Arthur F. Van Dyck, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, has suggested that "radionics" is a better word than "electronics." Electronics is of British origin and long has been widely used. More recently radionics has been introduced in America. Dr. Van Dyck told the engineers at their membership dinner in Chicago that "radionics" is an apt term to describe this field of activity.

Both terms deal with the application of vacuum tubes in electrical circuits not only for broadcasting and other radio communications, but to radio receivers, television, photoelectric units, rectifiers, phonographs, hearing aids, and many other allied items.

Radionics More Descriptive.

Last week E. F. McDonald Jr., the Chicago radio developer and manufacturer, seconded the move of Dr. Van Dyck.

"Most of the leaders of the radio industry to whom I have talked feel that the American term 'radionics' is more descriptive and less confusing to the public," he said.

"Radionics in my opinion," he continued, "is a word fit to describe the miracles now being wrought behind secret panels of laboratories for the winning of the war."

"Much to the Point."

"Radionics springs from the Latin 'to radiate,'" according to McDonald, "and from the Greek 'ion' [to wander or travel], and thus we get the term 'wandering or traveling radiations', which is much to the point and extremely descriptive.

"Electronics springs from the Greek root meaning 'amber' which was discovered to have certain properties when rubbed. Therefore I take it that electronics is wandering amber. Is that descriptive?

"The term 'electron' is of British origin, having been first used by C. J. Stoney in 1891. Since we did not adopt the British words petrol, underground, bobby, pup, valve, and wireless—instead using the Americanisms gasoline, subway, policeman, saloon, tube, and radio—why should we adopt the word electronics?"

'MIGHTIER THAN SWORD' TO TELL SINGAPORE FALL

The story of Japanese fifth column activities coupled with international intrigue, which caused the downfall of Singapore, will be told by Stanley Johnston on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program to be broadcast on W-G-N from 8:30 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, was told the story by a Chinese evacuée after the fall of Singapore. At that time Johnston was on assignment on the west coast, waiting to join the American fleet in the Pacific.

The program will show how the Japanese gained control of public thought by influencing censorship of stories leaving Singapore for newspapers in countries all over the world.

Another factor contributing to the success of the Japanese attack was the work of one particularly ruthless feminine spy.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La Frandre. Laurette Fillbrandt will play the leading rôle on this week's program.

ST. GEORGE HIGH WILL BE SALUTED ON CITIZENS HOUR

St. George High school of Evanston will be saluted from 1 to 1:30 p. m. today on W-G-N Citizens of Tomorrow.

Brother Patrick, principal at St. George, will discuss the preinduction program now being followed at St. George. He will be introduced by Philip Maxwell, master of ceremonies.

The senior class glee club will sing two numbers, "On Great Lone Hills" by Sibelius and "Ave Maria" by Tresch. Maxwell will add two more names to the Roll of Honor—Bernard J. Ahern, senior at St. George, and Tommy Corlett, Oskaloosa, Ia.

TREASURE HOUR OF SONG COMING BACK ON W-G-N

"The Treasure Hour of Song" will return to W-G-N and Mutual next Thursday from 8:30 to 9 p. m. The program will present Licia Albanese, soprano; Francesco Valentino, baritone, and Alfredo Antonini's concert orchestra.

The singers are members of the Metropolitan Opera company. Together with the 25 piece orchestra, they will be heard in well known operatic arias and musical comedy songs.

Pins Navigator's Wings on Fiance

Miss Mildred Theis of Granite City, Ill., pins the wings of an aerial navigator on her fiance, Lieut. Charles H. Jungels, 1105 North Latrobe avenue. Lieut. Jungels won his silver wings and the commission of second lieutenant in graduation exercises recently at the army air forces navigation school at Hondo, Tex., largest navigation school in the world.

'MARTHA' TO BE PRESENTED ON THEATER OF AIR

Miss Claire and Conley to Be Starred.

"Martha," von Flotow's best known opera, will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 next Saturday evening. This show is broadcast over W-G-N, W59C and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

Marion Claire, noted soprano, and Eugene Conley, young tenor of the San Carlo Opera company, will be starred.

Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, will be the speaker of the evening.

Kenneth MacGregor, chief of production for W-G-N, has prepared a special radio version of the opera that retains both the story and the important musical selections.

Miss Claire will portray the rôle of Lady Harriet of Queen Anne's court in Hampton, England, who drops her rank and changes her name to Martha. Conley will be cast as a farmer, Lionel, later disclosed as heir to the earldom of Derby.

A complete dramatic cast will portray the speaking rôles of the opera. Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber and by the chorus led by Robert Trendler. A supporting singing cast also will be presented on the show.

212 Stations for Mutual

WJZM, Clarksville, Tenn., will become an affiliate of the Mutual Broadcasting system, effective Feb. 1. Mutual will then have 212 stations.

In 'Easy Money'

Ruth Parrott will play the part of Lila on today's "Easy Money" broadcast at 6:30 p. m. over W-G-N.

RIFLE TRAINING IN FOREST PARK CALLED WAR AID

'Minute Men' Give Course to Those in Draft.

Citizens of the west suburbs anticipating military or armed militia service are being given an opportunity thru the efforts of the Forest Minute Men, Forest Park, to receive rifle and pistol marksmanship training.

The rifle school is held Monday nights at the park range in the building just south of the Hannah street station of the Garfield Park elevated. Pistol schools are held Sunday mornings.

Army Regulations.

Permission to conduct the school has been granted the Minute Men by the National Rifle association. Instruction methods and equipment used follow those recommended by the NRA and are in line with the small arms training methods of the army and marine corps.

Adj. F. W. Till, 1519 Marengo avenue, Forest Park, invites inquiries from those who wish to enroll. A new class started only last week. Those who had never handled a rifle before, he said, made a better showing on the range than some experienced hunters.

The school is being conducted with the military type of .22 caliber rifles using ammunition released for the purpose by the government. This type of arm, it is explained, is being used for basic training by all the services and the fundamentals learned with the bolt action .22 can immediately be applied to any other gun, including the Garand.

The course is composed of seven two hour lessons and includes safety, nomenclature, sighting, triangulation, use of sling, and shooting from all positions.

Gonder Is Instructor.

J. M. Gonder is chief instructor. His assistants are Paul Hicken and Reuben Johnson. Chester Gould has charge of the pistol school.

Thru the program, the NRA hopes to materially increase the percentage of men being inducted into the service with a basic knowledge of rifle marksmanship. With both time and the amount of ammunition available for training purposes at a premium, recruits already trained in marksmanship, it is hoped, will considerably lighten the burden on military instructors.

Sears Y Secretary.

Sears Y. M. C. A. has announced the appointment of C. B. Simpson as industrial and resident secretary.

UNFURL SERVICE FLAG TO MORTON HEROES FRIDAY

773 Stars, 9 Gold, in School Emblem.

Dedication of a service flag with stars representing 773 former students now in the war will take place Friday afternoon at J. Sterling Morton High school in Cicero. A huge star in the flag, 16 by 40 feet in dimension, will be made up of hundreds of small stars. There are nine gold stars in the flag, which will hang from the center of the auditorium stage.

The flag has been a project of the Boys' "M" club, which has a membership of 57 letter men in the school, and was undertaken by Rich Malecha, president, and Le Roy Fimiano, treasurer of the club. Mrs. E. N. James of the main office, and E. W. Green, club adviser, assisted with the research required in making the list of names as complete as possible.

Supt. W. P. McLean will speak at the dedication ceremonies and the high school band will play. Members of the "M" club will be seated on the stage.

Those honored by gold stars include:

Fred Grove, '36, fatally wounded in the summer of 1941 while flying with the R. A. F. "somewhere over England."

George Holl, '39, killed in action February, 1942, while on duty with the United States coast guard.

Otto Najeminik, '36, while serving with the R. C. A. F. made a forced landing while flying blind and overshot the flying field.

WEST SIDE YMCA GEARS HABITS TO ARMY STUDENTS

in the whole detachment. She appreciates the tastes of the men from all parts of the country, especially because of a recent seven month study of the favorite dishes of the states. She believes the men from the west and northwest are the biggest eaters.

Many of the student activities continue in the Y clubrooms and gymnasium. In addition to frequent parties shared by soldiers and nurses, several fraternities hold their meetings there. Basketball and volleyball enthusiasts come from the student staffs of Chicago Medical school, the University of Illinois, the dental and medical departments of Loyola university, and the Presbyterian and Cook county hospitals.

"For a long time YMCA volunteers and employés have performed a significant service for and with hundreds of professional students and staff members of Chicago's medical center," said Dr. Thesle T. Job, professor of anatomy of the medical department of Loyola university and chairman of the Y's board of directors. "The war cause has required of us in the center the temporary sacrifice of part of our Y building, but the students are carrying on their YMCA objectives and activities. We are glad we can furnish our equipment and facilities to the men in uniform to make their short stay with us as comfortable as possible."

17 Serve from 1 Post on South Side.

An average of one cut of every 33 members in a group of south side American Legion posts is now back in uniform, a survey made by THE TRIBUNE revealed last week. The number per post varies from as few as three men to as many as 17. They are among the 30,000 or 40,000 Legionnaires estimated now to be in the service.

Altho many of these Chicago Legionnaires are now in Africa, Iceland, Australia, Alaska, and other locations farther from home than they were 25 years ago, most of them have been assigned to administrative and training posts in this country.

Age Eliminates Many.

Due to the fact that the average Chicago veteran is 10 years over the maximum age now accepted by the army, the majority of Legionnaires are still ineligible for service despite their fighting experience. The remaining men, however, are backing up their former comrades in arms by taking a leading part in both civilian and production work on the home front.

Maj. John M. Bathum, 6612 Ellis avenue, charter member of the Woodlawn post when it was organized in 1919, is now abroad in charge of a detachment of young marines.

In a letter recently received by Post Commander Harry E. O'Hern, 921 East 61st street, Maj. Bathum said: "The greater percentage of men in my battalion enlisted only a year ago, yet their spirit and professional skill are such as to leave no doubt as to their ability or intention to prove to the enemy the error of his ways."

Before reëntering the marines, two and a half years ago, Maj. Bathum was a recreational director for the Chicago Park district in Jackson park.

Now Infantry Major.

Alfred V. Piquerney, 6735 Normal boulevard, a former commander of the Woodlawn post, is now chief petty officer in the navy. Another former commander, David H. Davis, is an infantry major.

The post is known as the "clearing house" for three Woodlawn area draft boards because of farewell parties held at the post headquarters, 6308 Woodlawn avenue. Members of the post and of the Woodlawn Business Men's association coöperate at these affairs by providing entertainment, coffee and cakes, and gifts. A priest, a minister, and a rabbi frequently appear together to counsel the men. Post Chaplain Fred Harper, 6555 Woodlawn avenue, a night defense worker, has also officiated at several ceremonies.

Home from Guadalcanal.

Capt. James Campbell of the United States marine corps returned recently on leave to visit his buddies at the Oakland-Kenwood post, 4444 Greenwood avenue, after serving in Guadalcanal. Capt. Campbell was in command of two construction companies. He is staying with his family at Valparaiso, Ind. The Campbells lived at 1135 East 45th street.

Seventeen members of the Hyde Park American Legion post, organized in 1919, and one of the oldest in the state, are again defending their country. Four of them are former commanders of the post, according to Lawrence S. Webster, 115 East 68th street, present chief officer.

Approximately 150 of the post's 387 Legionnaires are enrolled in OCD auxiliary police units on the south side, Commander Webster said. The post's headquarters, 5497 Lake Park avenue, are also used by other civilian defense organizations in the neighborhood for classes and meetings.

Hyde Park Sends Men.

William J. Mather, 1220 East 57th street, a member of the post and bursar of the University of Chicago, is now an army lieutenant colonel. Cavalry Capt. Eugene S. Shadford, 2521 Wabash street, Michigan City, Ind., is a former commander of Hyde Park post. He has been a physical education instructor in south side public schools since 1924.

In the last war, Lt. Hyman H. Lurie of the 166th air squadron claimed four German planes. Eight months ago Maj. Lurie gave up a prosperous business at 5315 Lake Park avenue, near the post headquarters, to rejoin the air corps. Now abroad, he is reported showing younger American flyers how to finish the job.

Post Gives Sendoffs.

Regularly scheduled sendoff parties are provided by Legionnaires of the Eaton-Priddy post at their headquarters, 7936 Cottage Grove avenue, whenever draftees from nearby boards are preparing to leave for induction. A gift box containing cigarets, candy bars, gum, an automatic pencil, postcards to send home, and a copy of the

Michael Logullo, in charge of the Commando group at Tuley park, gives instructions to William Roetzheim as he jumps the horizontal bar via a springboard.

Dropped Bar Ambition for Teaching Post.

Chauncey C. Willard, a high school principal who never attended high school, has announced he will retire from the public school system in February. Now executive at Du Sable High school, he has been a member of the system 35 years.

C. C. Willard.

The teacher almost became a lawyer. Nearing completion of a course at Drake university in 1903, Willard planned a career before the bar. However, soon after graduation from Drake, he was offered a teaching job. Teaching has been his profession ever since.

Studied Algebra on Farm.

Born near Decatur, Ill., 65 years ago, Willard made his own way after the death of his mother when he was 14 years old. For a time he worked on the farm of a cousin in Iowa, where once a farmhand caught him studying algebra. Mostly by self-instruction he prepared himself to pass the entrance examinations to Drake university.

In 1908 Willard became a member of the first staff of what then was Lane Technical High school, now Washburne Trade school. He remained at the technical high school until he left in 1921 to become assistant principal at what is now Roosevelt High school. Later he was principal of Ward and Gladstone elementary schools.

New Executive Post.

Willard was named executive assistant to William McAndrew, then city schools superintendent, in 1923 and was the first to hold that position. He was transferred to the principalship of Phillips High school in 1926. In 1935, when Du Sable was built to take the load off Phillips High school, he was named principal of the new school, a position he has held since.

Willard has been active in work for Negro welfare for several years. He is a member of the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A., which has the largest enrollment of any Negro Y center in the country. His co-workers report he has been active in crusading for teachers' rights and for improvement in the school system.

Honored with Social Room.

Recently to honor his tenure of office at Du Sable the C. C. Willard Social room was dedicated at the high school. At the same time a painting of Willard, which will hang in the room, was unveiled. The room is the gift of the student body, graduates, the PTA, and the board of education.

TryCommando Type Training at Tuley Park

A group of 40 boys, between 12 and 15 years old, are getting tough at Tuley park. Enrolled in a commando course given by Michael Logullo of the park's physical activities department, they undergo training similar in many respects to that given invasion troops.

The program stresses activities which strengthen every muscle in their bodies. The course lasts eight weeks and the first group will "graduate" in February with awards for successful completion of the work. Workouts were light in the beginning but have gradually been increased in intensity as the physical condition of the boys improved.

Run Obstacle Course.

Logullo has designed an obstacle course which the more proficient Commandos are able to complete in two and one-half minutes. Average time for running the course, he said, is about three and one-half minutes.

Boys running the course in the short length of time must be rather active, as a description will show. The commando starts the course by jumping a four foot bar via a springboard; he then chins himself three times on a bar; straddle-vaults a gymnasium buck and then climbs to the balcony of the gymnasium in which they work and drops to mats on the floor, a drop of about 12 feet; he then travels along parallel bars with hands; from there he swings by his hands across the room on five free swinging rings; climbs with his hands a rope suspended from the top of the gymnasium; climbs down and does a forward roll, then crawls thru a short tunnel, which ends the course.

Loosen Up for Test.

Before going thru the course the members of the group loosen up with calisthenics and a marching routine. Logullo gives them a talk on Americanism. On completing the obstacle course the boys end their workout with wrestling, judo, and basketball.

HOPE TO KEEP NEW PLAN IN LOCAL HANDS

StressMany Benefits for Suburbs.

Defense transportation chairmen have been named in communities in the Chicago metropolitan area to organize the new share-the-ride campaign inaugurated under joint sponsorship of the area offices of civilian defense and defense transportation.

A home to home survey, to ask all Chicagoland automobile owners to become members of group riding clubs, will be planned this week by these OCD volunteers at meetings in civilian defense headquarters thruout the city and suburbs.

Territory covered by the campaign extends from Waukegan on the north to Steger and South Chicago Heights on the south, and as far west as Naperville and Wheaton.

Broad Program in Suburbs.

In Chicago, where local transit facilities are extensive, the campaign will stress group riding to and from work.

Among the 118 suburban communities included in the area the campaign will be broader in scope, covering group riding to commuter trains, to school, to church, to clubs, and for shopping. This is due to the general lack of adequate transportation facilities in many towns.

During the course of the campaign, OCD personnel will ask every auto driver not already participating in a group riders' club to register as a prospective member.

Each motorist who registers gives his name, address, place of employment or other destination, hours of work or travel, and the capacity of his automobile. OCD volunteers will then determine groupings for each individual and advise him of others with the same hours, destination, etc.

Adopt Highland Park Plan.

The Highland Park share-the-ride plan, conceived last January by a north shore commuter, and developed there last year, has been chosen by Charles E. DeLeuw, area ODT co-administrator, as a model for the 118 other suburban communities.

Copies of a booklet outlining the methods and results of the Highland Park group riding plan have been mailed to OCD transportation committees.

"Many persons are now sharing their cars alternately in driving to and from work," De Leuw said. "These active group riders include employés of more than 650 war factories in the Chicago area. But in view of the serious shortage of rubber and the shortage of repair parts for automobiles there are still too many motorists driving alone."

Saves Tires and Autos.

"By stepping up the average load factor of each car to four or five persons the wear and tear on private automobile tires may be reduced by 75 or 80 per cent," he stated.

Major objectives of the campaign are:

Conservation of tires now on private autos.

Curtailment of nonessential driving.

Prevention of a breakdown in local transportation, thru greater use of automobiles.

Take Turns Driving.

When three car owners form a group each has his turn driving the others in his car one week out of every three. The other two weeks his car is not used. If the group consists of four or five, each auto operates even fewer weeks.

The share-the-ride plan completes the list of measures devised so far to curtail use of rubber. These measures include mileage [gasoline] rationing, staggered hours, revised routes and schedules, and the national 35 mile an hour speed limit.

South Side Leaders.

Community transportation chairmen who have been appointed in OCD divisions 1 and 2, include: Donald Bender, 7443 Crandon avenue, South Shore; W. J. Corribean, 7701 Eberhart avenue, Grand Crossing; C. M. Wolfenberger, 8226 Drexel avenue, Chatham.

South Side Legion Post to Dedicate Honor Flag

Members of the American Legion will have charge of a flag dedication to be held at 2 o'clock today at 1713 East 79th street to honor men in the army and navy from zone 23, block 2. The speaker will be from the OCD. Men in the block now in service are: William H. Dyer Jr., navy; R. L. Creekbaum, E. H. Ryan, and O. J. Mequuier, all in the army.

G. O. P. SEES BIG ALDERMANIC GAIN IN SOUTH WARDS

Hopes to Double Present Holding of 4 Seats.

BY HAROLD SMITH.

Republican leaders predicted last week that the party's south side holdings of four city council seats will be more than doubled in the approaching aldermanic elections.

South side wards now represented by Republicans are the 4th, 6th, 8th, and 9th. The G. O. P. spokesmen declared that the party will retain these four seats, and will probably annex the 2d, 3d, 5th, 7th, 17th, 18th, and 19th wards either in the aldermanic elections Feb. 23 or the runoffs April 3. Runoffs are required where no one candidate polls over half the total vote.

Lindell Appears Unopposed.

It appeared certain last week that the Democrats will indorse no candidate against Ald. Arthur G. Lindell [9th], it was rumored that they would similarly coöperate with the other three south side Republicans. These are Abraham H. Cohen [4th], Patrick Sheridan Smith [6th], and Roy E. Olin [8th].

The chances of new G. O. P. gains looked best in the 2d, 17th, and 19th wards, which have been returning Republican majorities in recent elections.

In the 2d the Republicans got behind Mack Atkins, an undertaker active in the William E. King organization. The Democrats were still debating whether to indorse Ald. Earl B. Dickerson, who ran as an independent in the congressional 1st district primary last year against the present congressman and Democratic ward committee man.

G. O. P. Backs Hazzard.

The 17th ward G. O. P. group, headed by Henry D. Lindblad, voted indorsement of Clifford L. Hazzard, 7441 Eggleston avenue. The Democrats are backing Ald. William T. Murphy, who is finishing his second term.

In the 19th the G. O. P. ward committee man, Harry A. Carlson, will carry his party's banner against Ald. John J. Duffy, also a second termer. The G. O. P. has carried this ward in all state elections since 1936.

FIRST—Because it contains the loop with its skyscrapers and high realty values, this is known as the richest ward in the world. It is 4.1 square miles in area, yet has the smallest permanent population of any ward. Its inhabitants decreased from 39,-312 in 1930 to 28,058 in 1940. Many of them live in the loop hotels, but they also include most of the city's Chinese, who live in the south end of the 1st, and the denizens of nearby flophouses and cheap lodging places. The present alderman, Michael [Hinky Dink] Kenna is retiring. The 1st is regarded as case hardened Democratic territory. Kenna is Democratic ward committee man. The G. O. P. committee man is former Sen. Daniel A. Seritella.

SECOND—This and the 3d ward contain most of the city's colored population. A large part of the ward presents an acute housing problem. The ward is the classical battleground of two strong Negro leaders, former Sen. William E. King, Republican ward committee man, and Congressman William L. Dawson, who left the G. O. P. four years ago to become the city hall's Democratic committee man. The ward is 2.4 square miles in area, and its population is 87,530, up slightly since the 1930 census.

THIRD—Only a little more than half the size of the 2d, this ward has nearly as many residents, most of them Negroes. Housing conditions as a rule are somewhat better. It is one of the fastest growing wards in the city on the basis of the 1940 figures, which show that it had 75,028 inhabitants as compared with 65,916 10 years earlier. Robert R. Jackson, a Negro, was the alderman for 22 years until 1939, when former Congressman Oscar De Priest eliminated him from the runoff, in which De Priest lost to a white man, Benjamin A. Grant. De Priest is G. O. P. ward committee man. The Democratic committee man is County Commissioner Edward M. Sneed.

FOURTH—Lying immediately east of the main colored section, the 4th ward is one of the oldest and finest residential areas in the city. The present alderman, Abraham H. Cohen, is a Republican. The ward is two square miles in area, and has a population of 68,977, up 1,300 in 10 years. Joseph P. Geary, president of the city civil service commission, is Democratic ward committee man. The G. O. P. committee man is Charles Krutckoff.

FIFTH—This ward centers about the University of Chicago, which plays a large part in its politics. In its three square miles live 92,123 persons, a gain of nearly 5,000 since 1930. Prof. Paul H. Douglas unseated Ald. James J. Cusack Jr. in a runoff four years ago, but last year left the seat vacant by joining the marine corps. David Eichner and John Leonard East are the Democratic and Republican ward committee men, respectively.

SIXTH—Woodlawn neighborhood, one of the busiest outside the loop, is in the 6th. So is Oakwoods cemetery, final resting place of many old settlers and Civil war soldiers. Most of the 79,440 persons who live within its 2.7 square miles are of native born parents. Patrick Sheridan Smith, former city clerk, captured the council seat for the G. O. P. from Ald. John F. Healy four years ago after his second try. Smith is the G. O. P. ward committeeman.

SEVENTH—A mixture of elements, the 7th has large scale industries in its southeast corner, the wealthy section near the South Shore Country club in its northeast corner, and substantial apartments and residences elsewhere in its 4.3 square miles of area. Its 1940 population of 89,372 was down more than 5,000 from 1930. The ward seat has been vacant since the death of Ald. Thomas J. Daley, a Democrat, a year ago.

EIGHTH—In the five square miles of the 8th ward live 77,712 persons, largely of Scandinavian, Hungarian, Polish, and Lithuanian origin. Its population has dropped about 2,800 since 1930. The Republicans have carried it in the last four elections. The sitting alderman, Roy E. Olin, a Republican, unseated Michael F. Mulcahy, now rationing administrator, four years ago, and has been indorsed for reëlection by the G. O. P. ward organization headed by Michael J. Connelly. The Democratic committeeman is James J. Sullivan, chief clerk of the sanitary district.

NINTH—With its 14.5 square miles, this is one of the largest wards in the city, yet its population shrank to 73,240 in 1940 from 78,552 10 years earlier. It was the setting for Edna Ferber's novel, So Big. It is an industrial ward, its largest factory being the Pullman plant where railway cars are made. The old town of Pullman was the first industrial community in the world. Ald. Arthur G. Lindell, ending his third term, is one of the few Republicans in the council.

TENTH—With its 19.3 square miles, the 10th is the largest ward in the city, tho its population of 65,843 [down more than 5,000 in ten years] is below average. Its population is concentrated largely in the south Chicago and east side communities, and it represents a varied racial mixture. William A. Rowan, a Democrat, represented the 10th in the city council from 1927 until he was elected congressman from the 2d district last November. He is still ward committeeman for his party. The G. O. P. committeeman is Dr. Harry E. L. Timm, the organization choice for alderman.

ELEVENTH — Largely industrial, the 11th ward has a shrinking population, composed mostly of thrifty, solid families of German or Irish origin. In its four square miles live 67,489 persons, as compared with 78,516 when the 1930 count was taken. Archer avenue, one of its busiest thorofares, is the Archey road where Mr. Dooley had his mythical saloon. Ald. Hugh B. Connelly, finishing his second term, is Democratic ward committeeman. William S. Finucane is the G. O. P. committeeman. The 11th is strongly Democratic.

SEVENTEENTH—This mainly residential ward is traversed by numerous important business streets. It is 3.5 square miles in area, and its 75,200 population is somewhat smaller than that of 1930. Ald. William T. Murphy, who is also Democratic ward committeeman, is ending his second term.

NINETEENTH—This ward contains two of the city's highest type residential sections, Beverly and Morgan Park. Its 14.8 square miles have a population of 69,814, representing a growth of about 3,500 in ten years. Thomas D. Nash, Democratic ward committeeman, has declared for Ald. John J. Duffy. Harry A. Carlson, the G. O. P. committeeman, is the Republican organization choice. The 11th usually goes Republican in elections.

HYDE PARK GROUP IN DRIVE TO CUT PUBLIC EXPENSES

Members in Defense, War Activities.

Participation by members of Hyde Park Property Owners, Inc., in a campaign to reduce expenditures of state, city, and county government was announced recently by Paul A. C. Anderson, president of the association. At the same time he outlined the war service of members of the group.

Delegations from the association have appeared at public hearings on the budgets of the city, park board, school board, and sanitary district on behalf of governmental economy. Delegations also have appeared before the board of county commissioners, who hold the purse strings of the county.

May Visit State House.

Anderson said his organization would coöperate with other taxpayers' organizations in sponsoring a state tax reduction program. Delegations probably will be sent to Springfield on this mission.

The report showed almost all members of the organization are engaged in war or civilian defense activity. Anderson is chairman of the 5th ward ration board, which also includes the immediate past president of the group, James J. Carroll, and Mrs. H. B. Horton, wife of one of the members. Leo J. Johnston, association vice president, is a member of selective service board No. 88, while George X. Rosenthal, a director of the association, is community commander of Hyde Park. William J. Wilson, business manager, recently was named community housing chairman.

List 1943 Program.

In addition to governmental economy, the 1943 program of the association will include full participation by all directors and officers in civilian war work, and use of all facilities of the association to this end; a definite program toward decrease of local real estate taxes; a move for stricter enforcement of ordinances "the continuing violation of which gives evidence of poor community housekeeping," and to seek a proper application of the new zoning ordinance.

SOUTH CHICAGO CLUB MAPS DRIVE ON STAGE FRIGHT

Forty Organize YMCA Speaking Group.

Launching a campaign against stage fright and to promote poise on the platform, some 40 men, most of whom are employed in the steel mills, are organizing a "toastmasters' club" at the South Chicago Y. M. C. A. This is the first such group organized in South Chicago. Officials of the club describe it as a dramatized public speaking course.

Formation of this club was begun by 10 members of the toastmasters' group which was organized at the Englewood Y. M. C. A. When completed the club will have an active membership of 30. Dinner meetings will be held every second Friday.

Five Minute Talks Planned.

Membership is limited to increase participation. At each meeting a toastmaster leads discussion. Five of the members make five minute talks, which are followed by a three minute criticism of these speeches, all made by members of the club. At the end of the meeting a "master evaluator" will discuss all talks in the light of merits and defects. Each meeting the speakers change. It is also planned to bring in outside speakers from time to time who will discuss phases of public speaking.

To prevent overly long talks the sergeant at arms will manipulate a set of lights to warn the speaker when his talk should be ended. If he disregards the light a gong will be sounded. A few seconds before the time limit expires an amber light will flash; red will tell the speaker his time is up and that he has 20 seconds to complete his talk.

Several Professions Represented.

While most of the men interested in forming the club are from the South Chicago steel mills, other professions represented include: insurance, newspaper, electrical engineering, undertaking, accountant, engineering, and real estate.

The Rev. Paul Folino of the United Church of South Chicago has been named president of the club. Other officers include: Leo Schapiro, secretary, and Charles L. Robinson, sergeant at arms.

PROGRAM SET UP TO TRAIN WOMEN FOR ENGINEERING

Under a plan to go into effect at the Illinois Institute of Technology in February, women will be given an opportunity to train for engineering positions and thus help meet what the war man power commission terms "the nation's most critical man power shortage." The program is believed to be the first of its kind in the nation.

Never before have women been encouraged to enroll in engineering; in fact, the number of women engineering students has been so limited that never has the census of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education on engineering enrollments included them. Last year there was a single women engineering student at Illinois tech; this year there are two.

Highlights of the program, as announced by President Henry T. Heald, are: [1] full time study; [2] a three semester program; [3] it will be offered on a block system, thus at the end of each semester the woman enrolled will be prepared to take some engineering post, but by continuing her studies she would be able to prepare for a more advanced job; [4] it will be open to any high school graduate; [5] it is designed for college credit work; and [6] it will be exclusively for women and only a limited number will be admitted.

Because of the urgency of the demand for engineers, women will go to school on a full time basis, being in class approximately 40 hours per week. In this way the maximum amount of training will be given in the shortest amount of time, Dr. Heald said.

HYDE PARK OCD GROUPS PREPARE DEMONSTRATION

Exhibit to Show Point System Rationing.

Organizations of Hyde Park will present a "Victory roundup" Friday and Saturday at the Hyde Park Neighborhood club, 56th street and Dorchester avenue. Sponsored by the civilian defense organization of the community, the program is designed to show what individuals can do on the home front during war time.

One of the most timely exhibits will be a graphic outline of the point system of rationing, which is to be put into effect soon in the distribution of many kinds of foods. Other exhibits will dramatize what is being done in the community by the civilian defense organization.

Program Shows Conservation.

The program also is designed to demonstrate what is being done to conserve food, clothing, and essential war materials. Other phases of civilian war life to be illustrated include what is being done to facilitate family readjustment to war time conditions.

Schoolgirls will stage a style show of made-over clothing. Another exhibit will outline nursery school care of children whose mothers are employed in industry.

Both afternoon and evening there will be shown a feature length movie, "Target for Tonight," the official film of a British royal air force bombing trip over Europe. It will be shown as many times as necessary to accommodate all visitors.

Morale Division Sponsor.

George X. Rosenthal is community commander. The exhibits are specifically sponsored by the morale division of the OCD, of which Mrs. John Davey is in charge. Others who are working on arrangements for the event include: Mrs. Dickson Leavens, Mrs. John Lau, Ben Lewis, Mrs. James Halley, Theodore Stone, Mrs. George Shambaugh Jr., Dr. G. Otis Whitecotton, Lou Ehrenreich, Aaron Sayvetz, D. W. Youngmeyer, and Elmer Ross.

Organizations coöperating with the Hyde Park civilian defense office include the American Legion and auxiliary, the Boy and Girl Scouts, the Institute of Military Studies of the University of Chicago, the Red Cross, the U. S. O., the Y. W. C. A., and the schools of the community.

British Professor to Talk.

John Garstang, professor emeritus of the University of Liverpool, England, will speak before members of the Garden Homes Woman's club at 1:30 o'clock Wednesday at 8646 Michigan avenue.

ASKS RADIONICS BE USED INSTEAD OF ELECTRONICS

American Term Is Called More Descriptive.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Dr. Arthur F. Van Dyck, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, has suggested that "radionics" is a better word than "electronics." Electronics is of British origin and long has been widely used. More recently radionics has been introduced in America. Dr. Van Dyck told the engineers at their membership dinner in Chicago that "radionics" is an apt term to describe this field of activity.

Both terms deal with the application of vacuum tubes in electrical circuits not only for broadcasting and other radio communications, but to radio receivers, television, photoelectric units, rectifiers, phonographs, hearing aids, and many other allied items.

Radionics More Descriptive.

Last week E. F. McDonald Jr., the Chicago radio developer and manufacturer, seconded the move of Dr. Van Dyck.

"Most of the leaders of the radio industry to whom I have talked feel that the American term 'radionics' is more descriptive and less confusing to the public," he said.

"Radionics in my opinion," he continued, "is a word fit to describe the miracles now being wrought behind secret panels of laboratories for the winning of the war."

"Much to the Point."

"Radionics springs from the Latin 'to radiate,'" according to McDonald, "and from the Greek 'ion' [to wander or travel], and thus we get the term 'wandering or traveling radiations' which is much to the point and extremely descriptive.

"Electronics springs from the Greek root meaning 'amber' which was discovered to have certain properties when rubbed. Therefore I take it that electronics is wandering amber. Is that descriptive?

"The term 'electron' is of British origin, having been first used by C. J. Stoney in 1891. Since we did not adopt the British words petrol, underground, bobby, pup, valve, and wireless—instead using the Americanisms gasoline, subway, policeman, saloon, tube, and radio—why should we adopt the word electronics?"

In 'Easy Money'

Ruth Parrott will play the part of Lila on today's "Easy Money" broadcast at 6:30 p. m. over W-G-N.

ST. GEORGE HIGH WILL BE SALUTED ON CITIZENS HOUR

St. George High school of Evanston will be saluted from 1 to 1:30 p. m. today on W-G-N Citizens of Tomorrow.

Brother Patrick, principal at St. George, will discuss the preinduction program now being followed at St. George. He will be introduced by Philip Maxwell, master of ceremonies.

The senior class glee club will sing two numbers, "On Great Lone Hills" by Sibelius and "Ave Maria" by Tresch. Maxwell will add two more names to the Roll of Honor—Bernard J. Ahern, senior at St. George, and Tommy Corlett, Oskaloosa, Ia.

Fritz Reiner to Conduct an All-Russian Program

Fritz Reiner will conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra in an all Russian program at 2 p. m. today over WBBM-CBS. The music will include Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," and the "Polka and Dance" from "The Golden Age" by Shostakovich. Also to be played will be Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony and Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice."

'MIGHTIER THAN SWORD' TO TELL SINGAPORE FALL

The story of Japanese fifth column activities coupled with international intrigue, which caused the downfall of Singapore, will be told by Stanley Johnston on the "Mightier Than the Sword" program to be broadcast on W-G-N from 8:30 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent, was told the story by a Chinese evacuée after the fall of Singapore. At that time Johnston was on assignment on the west coast, waiting to join the American fleet in the Pacific.

The program will show how the Japanese gained control of public thought by influencing censorship of stories leaving Singapore for newspapers in countries all over the world.

Another factor contributing to the success of the Japanese attack was the work of one particularly ruthless feminine spy.

"Mightier Than the Sword" is written and produced by Jack La Frandre. Laurette Fillbrandt will play the leading rôle on this week's program.

Like many other units of the American Legion, the Fort Dearborn post, 6400 Cottage Grove avenue, is issuing 1943 membership cards free to its members in service. The seven men who have left the post for active duty to date, represent a cross section of the services. They include a signal corps captain, a private, an army aviator, an army doctor, two navy pharmacist mates, and a marine sergeant stationed at a navy yard. In addition, 32 sons of post members are in the services.

Four Sons in Service.

The George L. Giles post, 5745 State street, has four sons of members in service and five post veterans. Staff Sergt. Samuel Samuel E. Merrill, 710 East Marquette road, who served with the 24th infantry in World War I., is now with an air base squadron at Tuskeegee, Ala. Pvt. Sidney James, 6048 South Park way, who received a Purple Heart award for his participation in World War I., is stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Capt. H. J. Watson is teaching bombardiers at Tuskeegee, according to Robert W. Dent, adjutant, who added that another post member is a sergeant with a quartermaster corps now and a fifth member is a lieutenant in the cavalry at Fort Riley, Kansas.

Gives 12 to Services.

In addition to contributing more than a dozen members to the services, the South Shore post, 2216 East 71st street, participates in civilian defense; Red Cross, and recruiting work. Thirty of the post's 270 members are enrolled in the OCD auxiliary police. Four veterans of South Shore are block captains. Comm. Harry Shaffer, 6837 Cornell avenue, is among the Legionnaires who have volunteered for the Red Cross blood donor service. He has given four times.

The post sponsors the Tornado squadron of army air cadets awaiting call for duty. Legionnaire Robert J. O'Donnell, 7201 Euclid avenue, chairman of the recruiting group, has been providing experts in aeronautical subjects to speak before the youths at their Wednesday night meetings at post headquarters.

Twenty sons of the South Shore post's members are in the army and navy. One of them, Jack W. Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur T. Jenkins, 2918 East 78th street, is listed by the navy department as missing after the fall of Bataan. He enlisted in 1939 and was a petty officer of the navy medical service.

Other Veterans at War.

Hyde Park post—Chief Petty Officer Joseph R. Bartol, U. S. N. R., 5220 Harper avenue; Lt. George S. Bassford, army air corps, Sutherland hotel; Lt. Col. Isaac J. Frisch, army medical corps, 1642 East 56th street; Lt. Col. George S. Middleton Jr., army field artillery, 2666 East 73d street; Capt. Joseph D. Bryan, Chancellor hotel; Pvt. Alfred L. Shorr, 5140 Woodlawn avenue; Lt. Col. Erwin M. Treusch, 5135 Kenwood avenue; Capt. Phillip C. Caldwell, 5200 Blackstone avenue; Maj. N. B. Clinch Jr., army air corps.

BOWEN HIGH SENIORS STAGE VICTORY PROM IN GYM FRIDAY NIGHT

The Bowen High school senior prom will be held in the school gymnasium, 2710 East 89th street, at 9 o'clock Friday, instead of at a hotel as has been the custom in the past. Named the Victory prom, it will feature decorations in red, white, and blue. Miss Daisy Knezevich, prom chairman, said the move from hotel to gymnasium was prompted by a desire to save gasoline, tires, and money. Members of her committee are: Bob Brigham, Eileen Klopsch, Violet Rambo, Donald Page, Zoan Zigich, and Mabel Osterberg. Robert Dinnocenzo, class president, and Mae Belle Lehnhoff, vice president, are executive members of the committee.

CHICAGO HOME OWNER MAKES MANY CHANGES

Helps with Some of the Work.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

Repair and remodel now. Keep your house functioning and conserve the supply of civilian goods by making things last as long as possible.

These are all watchwords of the day.

In 1937 he decided to begin to do some things for his five room brick bungalow at 7948 South Anthony. Now Mr. Fehr has a seven room bungalow, with three bathrooms instead of one, and an attic with several large rooms, all valuable, usable space since the upper floor is finished and the attic insulated. And a great deal of this work Mr. Fehr did himself.

Installed New Bath.

One of the first changes effected was to take space from the front hallway and bedroom and install a new bathroom. A new closet was built at an angle on the bedroom wall opposite the bath. This improvement has added an attractive bedroom and bath suite.

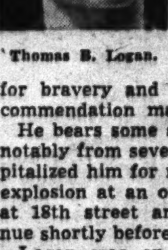
Later Mr. Fehr decided to add a third bedroom and bathroom at the back of the house and so for this he appropriated half of the rear porch and the old-fashioned pantry. Again a new closet was built at an angle in the outside wall. The new bathroom has yellow tile walls, black fixtures, a glass block window, and yellow accessories. The bedroom drapes and fittings are yellow and the furnishings blond.

New Recessed Shelves.

In the bedroom closets there are neatly placed shelves and racks for wardrobe needs. In the kitchen there are recessed shelves above the refrigerator and a nicely designed cabinet with mirrored shelves for house linens. A telephone niche has been placed in the hall between the dining room and kitchen, and in the bathrooms are recessed shelves for accessories.

Thomas B. Logan, Chief of Battalion, Quits Fire Service

Thomas B. Logan, a city fireman for 36 years and battalion chief since 1926, has retired on pension at the age of 63. He has moved out to a place with a gardening plot at 17749 Golf View avenue, Homewood, where he plans to do some gardening, play golf and do whatever he can to help in the war. Five citations for bravery and an official mayor's commendation mark Logan's record.



Thomas B. Logan.

He bears some scars of his service, notably from severe burns which hospitalized him for nine weeks after an explosion at an oil company refinery at 18th street and Wentworth avenue shortly before 1920.

Logan was on the scene at two large stockyards fires and fought several big elevator blazes in the south Chicago area.

"I don't feel as old as they say I am," the fireman said, and it may be because he has always kept active. He played professional baseball with the Toledo Mudhens, the South Bend team and the Vernon, Cal., team before joining the fire department and for more than 30 years one of his chief diversions has been golf.

Logan became a fireman in 1907, and served for 3½ years at engine house No. 10, then at La Salle and Harrison streets. He became a lieutenant in 1913 at engine house No. 8, then with hook and ladder companies No. 4 at 22d and Wentworth avenue and No. 34 at 73d street and Dobson avenue. He was made captain in 1919 with engine company No. 46 in South Chicago and served from 1920 to 1926 as captain at hook and ladder headquarters No. 16, 63d and Dorchester avenue.

Then he was made chief in charge of the 10th battalion, with headquarters at 31st and Dearborn streets, was transferred to the 16th battalion, with headquarters at 46th street and Cottage Grove avenue in 1929, and in 1935, was assigned to the 19th battalion, headquarters at 73d street and Dobson avenue, where he remained until his retirement.

If the outdoor bulb beds were not mulched [protected] do so before the spring thaws set in. Straw, free from weeds, coarse manure, litter of any kind, or glass wool may be used. Glass wool comes in small bales, costs more, but can be used for three years or more. Decayed manure when used as a mulch can be spaded or worked into the soil in spring.

Humus is so essential in plant growing that every effort should be made to obtain rich compost or decayed manure to spade under in the spring. Soils in many home gardens pack hard following a rain and cracks appear during the hot summer days, which are caused by a lack of humus.

Tuesday, Jan. 19.

It is nearing the time when some seeds should be sown to obtain good, strong plants for outdoor use. Lay in enough soil so it will be in prime condition for sowing. An excellent medium for sowing is two parts soil, two parts peat, and sufficient sand to insure porosity.

Dry soil should never be used for seeds or plants of any kind; if it is dry, take the sprinkler and water the dry soil, working it over and over with a spade. Small quantities of soil can easily be worked over with the hands.

Small seeds can be sown in rows or scattered broadcast over the surface of the soil and pressed in with a smooth board. The rule usually adopted is to sow twice the thickness of the seed.

Wednesday, Jan. 20.

Gardeners who want to improve their surroundings with shrubs should not overplant. Key plants can be placed at their proper, mature distances and when the group needs rearranging these key plants can remain.

Study the ultimate growth of the materials and plant accordingly. Use a few of the newer varieties to lend interest. Never select tall plants where more dwarf plants are needed. Plant shrubs in good, rich soil; if the soil is too heavy remove it entirely and replace with fresh soil.

Thursday, Jan. 21.

Attention is again called to the use of the hotbed and coldframe. There is nothing among garden accessories that is more valuable.

See that all tools are in condition for early use. Give a coat of paint to all parts that can be painted. Sharpen hoes, spades, and lawn mower. Repair and paint garden furniture, birdhouses, garden seats, and clean statuary.

Friday, Jan. 22.

As the season advances, look over the perennial borders to rearrange the mulching materials that may have been placed over the crowns of plants. Plants that have persistent foliage are often smothered out.

Give house plants frequent syringing. The maximum of light should be given most house plants. Never overwater house plants but see that they are not permitted to dry out.

Saturday, Jan. 23.

Pot plants that are filled with roots may need repotting or an application of plant food. Pinch back weak growths to force a stronger growth from the base or lower down on the stems.

[Prepared in coöperation with Garfield Park conservatory.]

Do You Make These Mistakes in English?

Sherwin Cody's remarkable invention has enabled more than 100,000 people to correct their mistakes in English. Only 15 minutes a day required to improve your speech and writing.

MANY persons use such expressions as "Leave them lay there" and "Mary was invited as well as myself." Still others say "between you and I" instead of "between you and me." It is astonishing how often "who" is used for "whom" and how frequently we hear such glaring mispronunciations as "forMIDable," "aveNOO," and "KEWpon." Few know whether to spell certain words with one or two "c's" or "m's" or "r's" or with "ie" or "ei," and when to use commas in order to make their meaning absolutely clear. Most persons use only common words—colorless, flat, ordinary. Their speech and their letters are lifeless, monotonous, humdrum.

Why Most People Make Mistakes

What is the reason so many of us are deficient in the use of English and find our careers stunted in consequence? Why is it some cannot spell correctly and others cannot punctuate? Why do so many find themselves at a loss for words to express their meaning adequately? The reason for the deficiency is clear. Sherwin Cody discovered it in scientific tests, which he gave thousands of times. Most persons do not write or speak good English simply because they never formed the habit of doing so.

What Cody Did at Gary

The formation of any habit comes only from constant practice. Shakespeare, you may be sure, never studied rules. No one who writes and speaks correctly thinks of rules when he is doing so.

Receives Two Salary Increases

"I can frankly say that my last two increases in salary were largely due to my improvement in English, as influenced by the course."
C. A. P. (Washington)

Great Business and Social Benefits

"I am a secretary and handle a large amount of correspondence. Your course has built up my vocabulary, made me accurate in spelling and punctuation. I now enjoy myself at social functions, knowing that I use proper English and, through your course, can express myself in more colorful language."
Miss L. M. L. (Illinois)

From a Minister

"It has proved most beneficial to me as a minister and public speaker. I can highly recommend it."

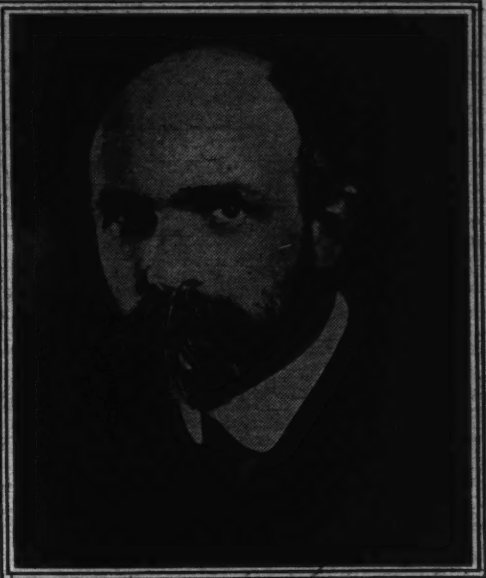
Finds Course Fascinating

"I am more grateful than I can say. No teaching could be easier, more practical, more absorbing."
F. W. (New York)

Here is our mother-tongue, a language that has built up our civilization, and without which we should all still be muttering savages! Yet our schools, by wrong methods, have made it a study to be avoided—the hardest of tasks instead of the most fascinating of games! For years this has been a crying disgrace.

In that point lies the real difference between Sherwin Cody and the schools!

Here is an illustration: Some years ago Mr. Cody was invited by the author of the famous Gary System of Education to teach English to all upper-grade pupils in Gary, Indiana. By means of unique practice exercises, Mr. Cody secured more improvement in these pupils in five weeks than previously had been obtained by similar pupils in two years under old methods. There was no guesswork about these results. They were proved by scientific comparisons. Amazing as this improvement was, more interesting still was the fact that the children were "wild" about the study. It was like playing a game!



SHERWIN CODY

The basic principle of Mr. Cody's new method is habit-forming. Anyone can learn to write and speak correctly by constantly using the correct forms. But how is one to know in each case what is correct? Mr. Cody solves this problem in a simple, unique, sensible way.

100% Self-Correcting Device

Suppose he himself were standing forever at your elbow. Every time you mispronounced or misspelled a word, every time you violated correct grammatical usage, every time you used the wrong word to express what you meant, suppose you could hear him whisper: "That is wrong, it should be thus and so." In a short time you would habitually use the correct form and the right words in speaking and writing.

If you continued to make the same mistakes over and over again, each time patiently he would tell you what was right. He would, as it were, be an everlasting mentor beside you—a mentor who would not laugh at you, but who would, on the contrary, support and help you. The 100% Self-Correcting Device does exactly this thing. It is Mr. Cody's silent voice behind you, ready to speak out whenever you commit an error. It finds your mistakes and concentrates on them. You do not need to study anything you already know. There are no rules to memorize.

Only 15 Minutes a Day

Nor is there much to learn. In Mr. Cody's years of experimenting he brought to light some highly astounding facts about English.

For instance, statistics show that a list of sixty-nine words (with their repetitions) make up more than half of all our speech and letter-writing. Obviously, if one could learn to spell, use, and pronounce these words correctly, one would go far toward eliminating incorrect spelling and pronunciation.

Similarly, Mr. Cody proved that there were no more than one dozen fundamental principles of punctuation. If we mastered these principles, there would be no bugbear of punctuation to handicap us in our writing.

Finally he discovered that twenty-five typical errors in grammar constitute nine-tenths of our everyday mistakes. When one has learned to avoid these twenty-five pitfalls, how readily one can obtain that facility of speech which denotes the person of breeding and education!

When the study of English is made so simple, it becomes clear that progress can be made in a very short time. No more than fifteen minutes a day is required. Fifteen minutes, not of study, but of fascinating practice! Mr. Cody's students do their work in any spare moment they can snatch. They do it riding to work or at home. They take fifteen minutes from the time usually spent in profitless reading or amusement. The results really are phenomenal.

Sherwin Cody has placed an excellent command of the English language within the grasp of everyone. Those who take advantage of his method gain something so priceless that it cannot be measured in terms of money. They gain a mark of breeding that cannot be erased as long as they live. They gain a facility in speech that marks them as educated people in whatever society they find themselves. They gain the self-confidence and self-respect which this ability inspires. As for material reward, certainly the importance of good English in the race for success cannot be over-estimated. Surely, no one can advance far without it.

It is impossible, in this brief review, to give more than a suggestion of the range of subjects covered by Mr. Cody's new method and of what his practice exercises consist. "Lady in the Dark" Opens Here Tuesday Evening

Miss Gertrude Lawrence Star of Novel Play

By Cecil Smith.

If Moss Hart had not become interested in psychoanalysis, there never would have been any "Lady in the Dark." The entire novel framework of this fabulous "play with music," which comes to the Civic Opera house Tuesday evening, was suggested by the content and method of psychoanalytic treatment.

As every one knows, dreams and fantasies play a tremendous rôle in psychoanalysis, for by interpreting these manifestations of subconscious memory and desire both the analyst and the patient are often able to gain important clews toward the solution of personality difficulties. Because of his own visits to a psychoanalyst, Moss Hart dreamed up the idea of writing a play around a neurotic heroine undergoing this type of therapy, and of turning the dreams and fantasies into musical scenes.

Liza Elliott, the character played by Gertrude Lawrence, is the highly successful editor of a fashion magazine. After 10 years at her job she finds, despite her good adjustment to her profession, that she is frustrated and frightened in her personal life. The book of "Lady in the Dark" traces her progress into a more confident self-possession. At intervals the dream scenes, bringing forward the suppressed parts of her personality, fade in and fade out.

This is an arresting design for a play. It is a far cry from the conventional musical comedy technique of employing a flippant and inconsequential book as a frame on which to festoon songs and dances. Mr. Hart intended the play to have serious values, and that is why he insists that "Lady in the Dark" is not a musical comedy, but a "play with music."

This carefully chosen descriptive phrase should not, however, give the impression that the musical elements, or the other purely entertaining aspects, are skimpy. Except for "This Is the Army," the most elaborate and expensive production now on tour is this very "Lady in the Dark." Its production cost was somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000; there are 100 in the company; four revolving stages, and 55 stagehands and mechanics are required for its presentation.

The whole production—play, music, investiture, everything—is focused upon its supreme figure, Miss Lawrence. You could no more imagine a performance of "Lady in the Dark" without her than "Victoria Regina" without Helen Hayes or "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" without Katharine Cornell. Hers is a long part, a hard part, and an infinitely variable one. Seldom has there been such an evening of quick changes. At a single light cue she may have to transform herself from a distraught business woman in her 30s to a girl in a graduation play. There is no time for elaborate offstage preparation at these moments. Only by sheer virtuoso acting alone does Miss Lawrence create the kaleidoscopic illusions of Liza's dream life.

Kurt Weill's musical score attains a similarly high plane. The haunting beauty of "My Ship" pervades the evening. And who has not been amused and stirred by the daring lilt, and by Ira Gershwin's saucy rhymes, of "The Saga of Jenny." But apart from the hit numbers, the entire score has a fidelity and clean artistry of workmanship which bespeaks the superior skill and inspiration of its composer. If you remember the miracle of "September Song" in "Knickerbocker Holiday," you will recognize that Mr. Weill's skill in orchestrating and harmonizing the music to suit Walter Huston's thin little voice was a triumph of unsurpassed craftsmanship.

Hassard Short is the man who can claim major credit for the perfection with which the immense technical problems of staging "Lady in the Dark" have been solved. He read the script many weeks before the cast was chosen. He conferred constantly with Harry Horner, the scenic designer, and with Irene Sharaff and Hattie Carnegie, the costumers. He conceived the lighting effects, on which so much depends, and for weeks spent 18 hour days preparing every technical detail for an opening night in Boston so smooth that Boston critics, used to rough and ready tryout performances, were completely amazed.

If you think this was a simple task, just imagine yourself a stage director confronted with a script which said no more than "Night club unfolds like a rose." Granted the physical limitations of a stage, just how would you make a night club unfold like a rose? Or how, short of using movie cameras and film, would you obey the instruction, "Doctor's office fades into Park avenue apartment house?"

The four revolving stages, two moving clockwise and two counterclockwise, make these feats possible. Each of the four stages is manned by eight stagehands, and long preliminary rehearsal is necessary to articulate the functions of the 32 technicians.

So perhaps you can see why "Lady in the Dark" will not be ready to open at the Civic Opera house until Tuesday evening, and why it will be one of the spectacular events of the season when it does open.

Howard Lang Pins Hopes on "Life's Like That"

Having lost his gamble on "The Sun Field," which closed after five days in New York, Howard Lang coproducer with Al Rosen of "Good Night, Ladies" at the Blackstone theater here, now pins his affections on a comedy, "Life's Like That," by Charles Sherman and Edward Clarke Lilley. The script is not finished yet, and production will not take place till spring.

that moment, Victoria noted the girl who took the cup of coffee, helped herself to sandwiches and moved away. She was about Victoria's age, a thin, pretty blonde with an efficient air that somehow gave an impression of officialdom. The girl, neat and thin in her gray tailored silk dress, with a demure white collar and cuffs, moved away.

Victoria said to John Campbell, "Tea?"

"No," he said. "That is—O, well, yes. I'm afraid I startled you. Of course, I realize that your recollection of me isn't a very pleasant one. But I—you see, I saw you from across the room. And I wonder if you could get away from this. There's something I want to talk to you about."

She said: "All that trouble about Henry's death is over. I suppose you were only doing what you thought was your duty. But now it is in the past and I hope will be forgotten."

Around them voices and people and cigaret smoke and the little clatter of china, rose and fell in eddies.

John Campbell said: "Yes, I understand. It was unfortunate, all of it. I——" he stopped and seemed to arrange what he wanted to say. "I wouldn't remind you of it," he said then rather carefully, "if I didn't think it was necessary."

"Necessary?" Her head went up so she met his eyes directly.

"But that's all over," she said swiftly again. "The case is closed ——" She stopped abruptly because of the grave look on his face. He said, gravely too, "I hope so."

"Hope so!" Her voice sounded high and frightened. She caught it and her breath to a more normal level and said: "What do you mean?"

There was an effect of hesitation in his reply, again, as if he waited to consider it. "Look here," he said. "Outside the door from the library there's a side path leading down to the lake. Will you meet me there—say, in about 15 or 20 minutes? Or whenever you can get away from here?"

"But—there's nothing," she began. He said abruptly: "Please—I'll wait for you there."

"So You're in the Army Now!"

Some one behind him said: "Hi, John. So you're in the army now ——" Campbell turned to reply and moved away and a voice at her other side said briskly: "More tea, Vicky, please. Lots of sugar and cake from the looks of her—it's for my major's wife——" It was Hollis; his voice broke off, then he said, lower: "Vicky, who was that tall, black haired fellow talking to you? It looked like the fellow who accused you of pushing Henry into the river."

"Yes. That's who it was. John Campbell."

"I thought so. That's right, his name was Campbell. All done up in uniform now! Well, did you put a pinch of cyanide in his tea?"

"No," she said shortly, lifting the tea pot.

"An opportunity wasted," said Hollis. "God, it's hot. So this is army life! How do you like the colonel's little pep meeting?"

Hollis Isham was, unlike his mother, very fair . . . a hard blond, with a long face that flushed easily; and cold light blue eyes. He had, however, his mother's gift of unexpected charm. He and Agnew were actually Victoria's second cousins; Bessie Steane Isham [widowed many years before] had been a first cousin to Victoria's father. The family was small, however, and Bessie and Victor Steane had been more like brother and sister than cousins; after Victor, and then old Mrs. Steane died, Bessie had taken Victoria under her own somewhat tempestuous wing, along with her two sons. Since Victoria's house was big —too big, Victoria often felt—Bessie and Agnew and Hollis lived with her. Bessie liked Victoria, quarreled with Clistie, bore with Agnew [barely 18], and adored Hollis.

Now Hollis' slender, handsome face was a little flushed, his blond hair in tight, damp looking ringlets. He looked very slim and very elegant in his uniform. If one didn't know him extremely well, one —well, one wouldn't have heard the edge of derision in his suave and pleasant voice. But Victoria did hear and said: "Don't talk like that, Hollis."

"Afraid somebody will hear me? Suppose they do! It's a free country. Where's the cake—O, I see. I've got a leave tonight. I'm coming home with you to the festive dinner party. See you later, darling."

He waved gracefully at Bessie whose dark eyes had lighted instantly and who was watching him with an adoring smile, and went into the living room.

The cluster of people around the table was thinning out. Thalia had disappeared. At the door of the little hall Col. Galant was shaking hands with a few people who were leaving. Victoria glanced around the almost empty room and got up.

Victoria went into the little library adjoining the dining room. Agnew was there, tall and lanky, blinking near sightedly because he wasn't wearing his spectacles, and munching sandwiches rather morosely from a large heap on his plate. Victoria sidled thru clusters of uniforms, of print silk dresses and wide straw hats, and reached his side.

"Where is Thalia?" she said.

"I don't know but I can tell you just the same. In the center of the largest circle of uniforms."

"I'm glad she's having a good time," said Victoria absently. Agnew munched in silence for a moment and Victoria munched, too. And thought again of Henry Frame.

In its essentials it was a simple enough story. A trusted employé, Henry Frame embezzled over a long period of years. When he was threatened with exposure, he committed suicide.

Those were the facts. It was the circumstances that had made it so difficult for all of them and John Campbell, thought Victoria, had been largely responsible for the significance those circumstances took on—as if he'd painted them, adroitly, with sinister colors. Yet in their true colors the circumstances were altogether comprehensible.

Victor Steane, Victoria's father, dying and knowing he was dying, had sent for Henry Frame. That was over 15 years before. Victoria was a child of eight or so and old Mrs. Steane, her grandmother, was still alive. The Steane mills at the time of Victor Steane's death had been flourishing. It was an era of building and prosperity and the mills—lumber mills—under Victor Steane's control and ownership had been at the time of his death at a peak of production.

And there was no one in his family to take over the management of the mills. His mother was old, his wife had died several years before. Victoria was almost a baby. Bessie Isham knew nothing of the business and at the time of Victor Steane's death, Hollis was 12 and Agnew 3. Sometimes it was the tacit understanding, a place would be made for each of them, if he wanted it, in the mills. But then there was literally no one to take over the management of the business; no one, that is, but Henry Frame. Henry Frame knew the business. He was Victor Steane's trusted employé and closest friend.

In order further to protect his mother and his daughter and having, as all of them had always had, the fullest confidence in Henry Frame, Victor had also provided against his removal from the management of the business. Henry himself could resign and still retain his block of Steane Mills stock, but no one could force him to resign without proof of what Victor Steane called, and this was the phrase, "flagrant dereliction of duty."

In the end, of course, the arrangement worked out so that Henry Frame was actually accountable to no one. He was not only the manager of the business, he was its unquestioned czar. It would take months for the accountants to disentangle the past records. It was all coming out, slowly. The important fact was that Henry Frame, that gray, dry, tight lipped little man with winking, serious eyeglasses had, over a long period of years, systematically and simply stolen from the business placed in his care. And from, naturally, Victoria, and Bessie, and Bessie's children.

It wouldn't have come out when it did. It wouldn't have come out for years, perhaps, if Victoria hadn't, that winter, asked for more money. She was given, of course, enough to live on. By pinching pennies she could keep up the house which Victor Steane, having nothing else to do with his money, had built on the beautiful banks of the St. Sebastian shortly before his wife's death. It was the house that was expensive and a drain on the money Henry sent her. Her other expenses could be, and were, simplified—ridiculously simplified, Bessie had often said, for a young woman in her position. But none of them, ever, had questioned Henry's integrity, or his wisdom.

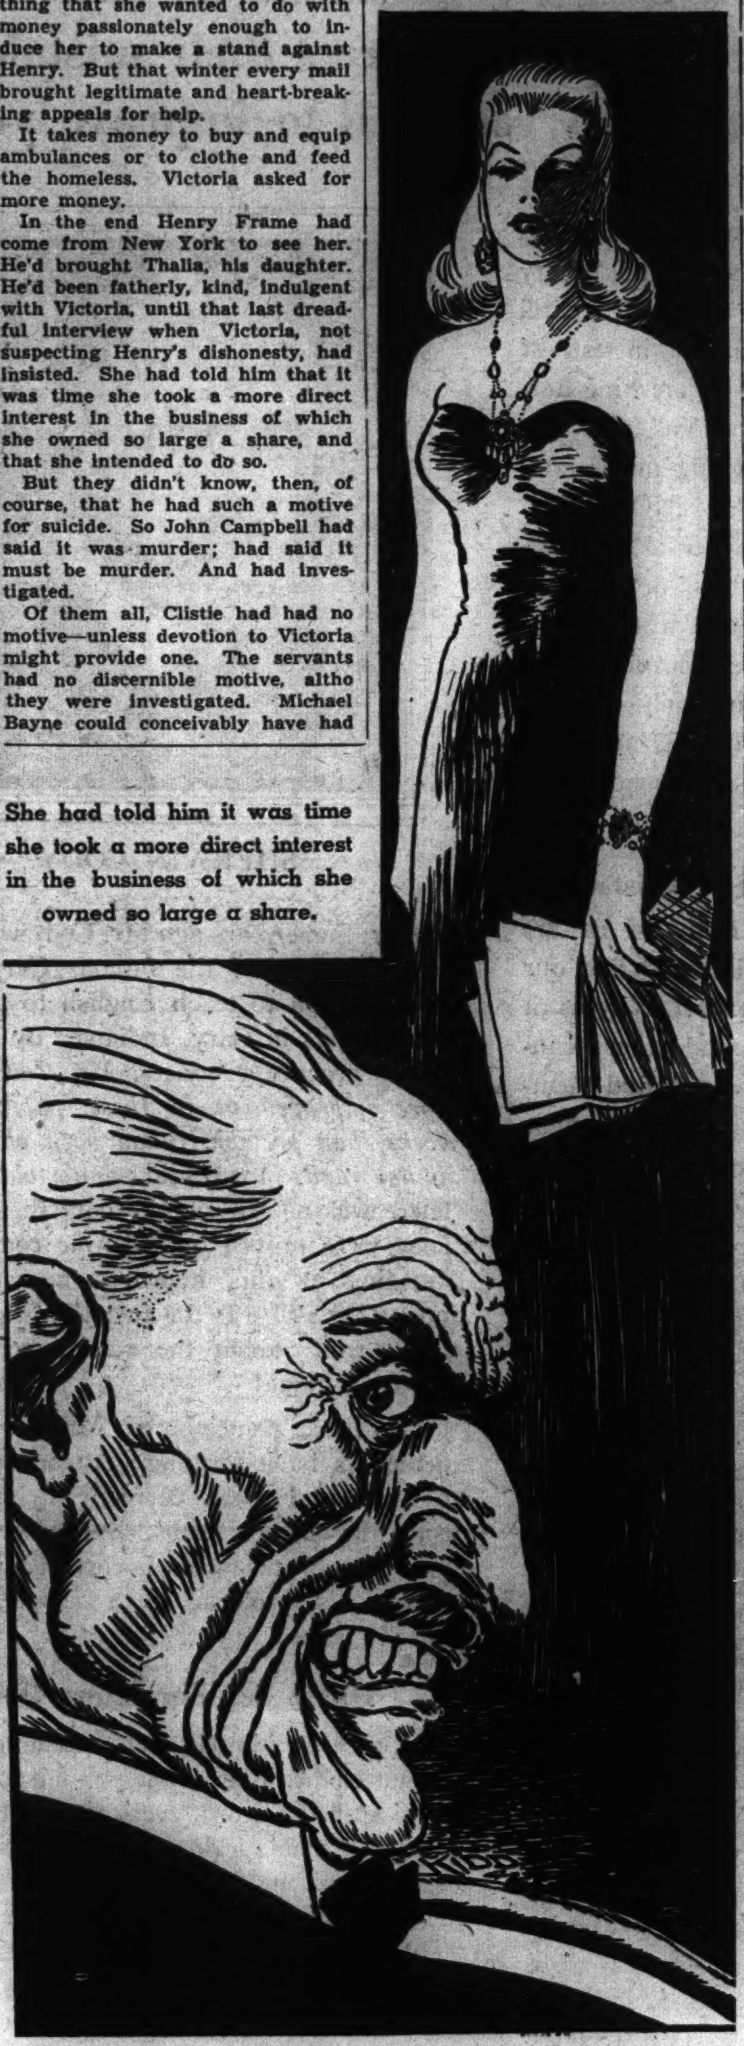
Until that winter, when for the first time Victoria began to inquire into the business. It was a war year and she was supposed to be a very rich young woman, yet she had no money in her own hands. Up to then there hadn't been anything that she wanted to do with money passionately enough to induce her to make a stand against Henry. But that winter every mail brought legitimate and heart-breaking appeals for help.

It takes money to buy and equip ambulances or to clothe and feed the homeless. Victoria asked for more money.

In the end Henry Frame had come from New York to see her. He'd brought Thalia, his daughter. He'd been fatherly, kind, indulgent with Victoria, until that last dreadful interview when Victoria, not suspecting Henry's dishonesty, had insisted. She had told him that it was time she took a more direct interest in the business of which she owned so large a share, and that she intended to do so.

But they didn't know, then, of course, that he had such a motive for suicide. So John Campbell had said it was murder; had said it must be murder. And had investigated.

Of them all, Clistie had had no motive—unless devotion to Victoria might provide one. The servants had no discernible motive, altho they were investigated. Michael Bayne could conceivably have had small and relatively unimportant a motive. He was manager of the west coast office of the Steane mills and had come on only a few days before to meet Henry. Michael was investigated, too.



She had told him it was time she took a more direct interest in the business of which she owned so large a share.

There followed about three weeks of horror. It was nothing else. The coroner's inquest—adjourned. The newspapers. The columns of print. The pictures. The inquiry. The nine days wonder of it.

And then the fact of Henry's long embezzlement had been uncovered. The decision of the coroner's jury had been suicide.

Thalia, a victim of Henry's death in spite of anything they could do, stayed on with them. Henry had not only embezzled money, he had made a series of fantastically unsound investments with it. There was no question of restitution. Luckily, however, he had been cautious enough not to kill the goose that laid golden eggs for him and the business itself was in good shape. Henry had stolen only from its profits. Thus Victoria could easily, later, provide for Thalia, and would. It was the least she could do. All of them, even Agnew who didn't much like Thalia, had done what they could to make her forget the bitterness and tragedy of Henry's death.

Victoria let herself quietly out the door. There was a small, newly graveled path leading down to the lake which lay in a long halfmoon and sparkled now with gold from the low western sun.

The great, new, army camp lay behind her, far-flung and shimmering in the sun. It was an enormous camp with acres and acres of long, low buildings that were offices or mess halls, or hospitals and acres and acres of tents built up sturdily with sidewalls of lumber and screens inside the brown canvas. Scattered groups of bungalows, new and bright with paint, were officers' houses.

To Victoria the swift building of the great camp, and the speed and efficiency with which a huge military machine had blossomed into operation, had been exciting, and awe inspiring.

Col. Galant had been sent there as post commander and had naturally made her house what Agnew called his "home from home." Hollis, leaving his not very important position in the New York office of the Steane mills when he was conscripted, had had the good luck to be sent to Camp Blakoe. Friends at a distance were constantly writing to Bessie or to Victoria; little introductory notes asking them to look up this or that friend who was coming to stay near her husband who was at camp.

Bessie always did so and had little dinner parties. Hollis brought his friends home. Agnew adored anything in uniform—except Hollis, who to Agnew was no different in uniform than Hollis in mufti, altho to Bessie obviously Hollis was the whole United States army and even Clistie, who had never got on too well with Hollis, softened and saw to it that the cookie box was full.

Dotted along the lovely, tranquil banks of the St. Sebastian river, there was a sprinkling, but only a sprinkling, of country houses and to these inevitably the social life of the camp drifted. Victoria's house was one of them, and Bessie, a born hostess, frankly enjoyed it. All in all, Camp Blakoe was an integral part of their lives.

That is, after the rather dreadful interlude following Henry Frame's death during which they avoided seeing any one. Altho as a matter of fact it had occurred during the time when the camp was being built and before it was actually occupied.

Village Snug on Further Shore

Victoria stopped at the edge of the lake, took off her hat, and let the light breeze touch her face and her smooth, high pompadour, while she looked thoughtfully across the lake to where a village, swollen far beyond its normal size, lay snugly on the further shore. There were already a few lights.

What was John Campbell going to say to her?

"The case is ended," she'd said. And he'd said, quietly: "I hope so."

She turned at the crisp sound of footsteps and John Campbell was coming toward her along the path.

She didn't feel any particular grudge; she didn't hate him. She had been, she supposed, afraid of him; all of them had been afraid of him, except perhaps Thalia, whose gentle poise had never wavered for an instant under his inquiry. But then Thalia had not been suspected of murder.

He looked well in uniform, she thought. The trim lines suited the swinging, graceful way he walked, and the way he carried his black head. He, too, she admitted rather grudgingly to herself, had charm, the kind that is as elusive as the rain and as unconscious. It was in his rare smile, in the way his brown face lighted, in his bright, discerning hazel eyes. But he had force, too, a suggestion of latent strength below that pleasantly impersonal manner.

As he approached her, indeed, she remembered everything about him, his mobile brown face, the firm full curve of his mouth—even quite small things such as the touch of gray above one temple, and the little laugh lines around his eyes. She even remembered his hands, long and brown, too, and the way he wore a seal ring so the seal, to her, looked upside down.

It was, really, disconcerting to remember anybody like that, so well and so familiarly that she and John Campbell might have been friends all their lives; as if indeed some very close relationship had existed between them so every line and every look was inexpressibly familiar to the other. Lovers would remember each other like that.

She thought that unexpectedly and caught it back as if it had wings and might escape her. It was, of course, the reverse of their relationship. They had been enemies, rather; a hunter and his quarry. A state's attorney and his principal suspect. A policeman and his prisoner.

Nevertheless, as he neared her, her hands tightened around the brim of her hat. She didn't know that she had taken exactly the pose with which she had many times answered the steady pound of his questions—head up, eyes direct and blue and defiant—and frightened below that defiance.

UNIDENTIFIED WOMAN

It was next morning when Henry had been found.

IT was the last week in December that Henry Frame died. He died under unpleasant circumstances. So unpleasant in fact that weeks later the memory of his death [and the manner of it], was still like a shadow hovering the house; like a figure skirting over obscurely, but stubbornly, the edge of one's vision.

Not that anybody wanted to remember Henry, and not that anybody wasn't more than content to let bygones be bygones. Until, that is, an afternoon in March, over two months later; Monday, March the 10th, to be precise, a sunny day, unseasonably warm even in that semi-tropical climate. The day of the colonel's tea party.

And it was Clistie who, that afternoon, first suggested the unpleasant memory of Henry's unpleasant death. When the colonel's car arrived to take them to the post, and Victoria went to tell Clistie that they were leaving, Clistie was doing a very odd thing.

Clistie Practical and Sensible

Clistie Forbes, fiftyish, thin, wiry, with observant eyes, and nubby, devoted hands, had lived with old Mrs. Steane [Victoria's grandmother] for 20 odd years, as housekeeper, secretary, and confidant. She had run the house, the servants [and the family], for so long that she was a fixture, even now that old Mrs. Steane had been dead for five years and Victoria was 23. And Clistie was practical and sensible.

For she was sitting on a bench in a little niche made by a clump of pines quite close to the river edge, and looking behind her. Looking very earnestly behind her into the clump of pines. And Victoria could tell by the strained pose of her neck that she was listening.

Seconds passed and she did not move. She was as tense and still as a cat, stalking. Or, it struck Victoria unexpectedly, as some small wary animal being stalked.

It was an extraordinary thought altho no more extraordinary than Clistie's pose. It caught and held Victoria for a moment so that she, too, stood motionless on the terrace above, with the sun shining upon her bare, golden brown hair. She was slender and erect. Her small head was proudly set so she looked taller, really, than she was.

There was character in her face with its short straight nose and cleanly defined temple and cheek line. But just then, watching Clistie, her blue eyes looked dark and troubled, and her gay, soft young mouth had an uncertain, worried curve. She wore a cream colored, thin shantung dress and blue linen sandals and carried a wide brimmed straw hat. A light, warm breeze touched her cheeks and stirred the clump of pines. There was nothing there. Nothing to see and less to hear.

Clistie got up and scuttled swiftly up the slope of green lawn and live oaks that lay between the river and the house, almost as if she were pursued. There was another bench, less sheltered but very near the terrace, and she sat down there. She did not see Victoria.

By MIGNON G. EBERHART (Copyright: 1943: By Mignon G. Eberhart.)

She stared down toward the river. Or rather, toward the pier—below which Henry Frame had died on a December night some 10 weeks before.

Victoria took a quick breath and stepped down from the low, pillared porch, with its enchanting views of the river, thru the arches made by the great live oaks, laden and festooned with long, ghostly wisps of Spanish moss.

"Clistie."

Clistie Forbes turned with a start. "O—Victoria! Haven't you gone to the colonel's tea party yet?"

"We are just leaving. I came to tell you. Clistie, what were you looking at? Down there, I mean; in the pines."

"Nothing," said Clistie.

"But you—you looked as if you'd heard something——"

"Did I?" said Clistie. She rose. Her greenish brown eyes were perfectly blank. "You'd better hurry. Your aunt doesn't like to be kept waiting." She led the way across the lawn, around the end of the house, toward the circle of driveway and the front entrance which were on the side opposite the river.

Victoria followed. When they reached the drive Clistie said: "Run along, Victoria, don't keep them waiting," and gave her a scrutinizing look—the kind of look she always gave Victoria when she left the house. She all but took Victoria's chin and lifted her face to see that it was clean and she had brushed her teeth, as Clistie had done in fact not so many years before.

And then Clistie added quite unexpectedly: "We ought to have some dogs."

"Dogs!"

"O, I know why we haven't. Your grandmother always hated them on account of the gardens. But it's—it's a big place," said Clistie. "On the river—in the country—with the pine woods——" She paused, her eyes thoughtful. And said: "Big dogs. Watch dogs."

"Why?"

"O, never mind. Only, Victoria, I'm glad things are turning out as they are. For your sake. After Wednesday——" She paused again thoughtfully, looking at Victoria. "Yes, I'm very glad about that. Go on, now. Have a good time."

"But Clistie——" began Victoria.

Aunt Bessie, sitting in the colonel's car with Agnew and Thalia, had seen her. "Do hurry, Vicky," she called peremptorily.

Clistie turned toward the garden—toward a little promontory above the river where there were chairs, a sundial, and a Brittany millstone, sunk into the soil and originally level with it, but now almost hidden by the gradually encroaching soil and grass around it. Victoria waved at her and hurried to the waiting car.

Two hours later she was still sitting at one end of Col. Bruce Galant's tea table, dispensing tea to those who wanted it, with Aunt Bessie at the other end of it, pouring coffee. There were red roses in the middle of the lace-draped table, the flash of silver, the fragrance of coffee and cigarets, flowers, and perfumes. There were candles altho it was still daylight and there were voices everywhere like the waves of a sea. Col. Galant had been afraid they wouldn't talk.

Col. Bruce Galant, tall, spare, gray haired, born and bred in the old army tradition, was post commander at the big, new army camp. He had never married—which Bessie said was a mistake—and he was and had been for many years a close family friend of the Steanes. It was his first party since coming to the camp and he had planned it to give the officers and their wives, pouring now into the big, new army camp, a chance to get acquainted.

"It shakes 'em down," he had said when he invited Victoria and Bessie. "Civilian life and army life are very different. Most of these people have been civilians all their lives. They've got to blend now with the army." "Esprit de corps," said Bessie warmly. "I see just what you mean. But it's too bad, Bruce, that you have no hostess."

The colonel looked briefly uneasy as he always did when Bessie referred pointedly to his wifeless state. "But that's what I'm asking you and Victoria to do for me," he'd said quickly. "And Thalia, too, of course," he added hurriedly, lest it sound like an afterthought. They were all very careful of Thalia Frame's feelings since her father's, Henry Frame's, death.

Victoria, remembering the conversation now, glanced around the crowded little dining room. In a corner she caught a glimpse of Thalia's broad brimmed straw hat and lovely, little face, animated and smiling, between two stalwart and uniformed shoulders. Thalia was all right then.

The small house was packed and people were taking their tea or coffee out on the porch. Every one was talking. Assiduous young lieutenants were supplying their majors' wives with cakes. The wives of the young lieutenants were exchanging confidences about living quarters. The older, more accustomed wives of the regular army officers were moving briskly about, chatting, seeing that the party "went," doing their full social duties adeptly. The party was a success, thought Victoria, and then some one moved and she had an instant's glimpse of a face she knew too well. And for the second time that afternoon, but much more poignantly and forcefully, she was reminded of Henry's death and the manner of it.

The man in the doorway, tall enough so she could see his shining black head, and brown face, and dark, hazel eyes over the heads of several people between, was John Campbell. He was state's attorney [and also, by an odd chance, the coroner] of Ponte Verde county and she knew his face too well because it was he who had been called when Henry Frame was found [drowned, below the pier, one arm caught around the willows]. John Campbell had been called because he was coroner. He had remained to investigate because he was state's attorney, and had said Henry was murdered.

So John Campbell was here, too! Victoria had had only a glimpse of his face—hard and brown, with his hazel eyes bright and intent—exactly as she remembered it against the gray, damp-stained walls of the little shabby courtroom. Questioning her about murder.

Across the table, beyond the crimson lake of roses, Aunt Bessie was pouring coffee. Victoria absently watched her large, fleshy hands—dark and laden with rings. Bessie wasn't blonde like the Steanes. She was dark with masses of rather untidy hair, and large dark eyes which showed too much white.

Thick Hand and Winking Diamonds

Now her thick hand with its winking diamonds clutched the silver coffee pot and stopped pouring. It was that, that caught Victoria's attention; the silver coffee pot held motionless in midair. She looked at Bessie and Bessie was looking at some one near Victoria. Staring, really, her dark eyes showing white, startled rims. Victoria turned abruptly to follow Bessie's look.

John Campbell was standing beside her. He was wearing a uniform. There were the maple leaves of a major upon his shoulders. He was looking down at her, his eyes smiling but very bright and intent in his brown face, as she remembered them. He said pleasantly: "How are you, Miss Steane?—I see you don't remember me. I'm John Campbell."

She had not seen him since the investigation following Henry's death had ended; she remembered him altogether too well.

The brown stream started pouring again from the coffee pot in Bessie's jeweled hand, but Bessie was nervous, thrusting the cup at the girl who stood waiting to receive it, pushing cream and sugar toward her. Rather oddly, too, in

Margaret Speaks and Rise Stevens to Sing Here

Milton Preves Will Play Viola Solo This Week

By Claudia Cassidy.

A soprano, a mezzo soprano, and a violist are soloists at the week's major concerts, meaning Margaret Speaks of the radio, who appears with the Woman's Symphony orchestra at Orchestra hall Wednesday night; Risë Stevens of the Metropolitan Opera, who sings her first Chicago recital at the Civic Opera house this afternoon, and Milton Preves, who plays Ernest Bloch's Suite for Viola and Orchestra with the Chicago Symphony orchestra Thursday night and Friday afternoon, also at Orchestra hall.

Milton Preves.

Perhaps you have heard the old story of the frantic conductor who cried: "Violinists are a dime a dozen—get me a good horn player and I'll thank you." He might have varied that with a plea for a good viola player, only to have it promptly answered by Mr. Preves. This young virtuoso on what many consider, unjustly, a dubious instrument, worked his way up from the Civic orchestra to first viola chair with the Chicago Symphony. He has appeared as soloist at Orchestra hall, at Ravinia and at Grant Park, has helped turn the Budapest quartet into a quintet, and was first viola of the original Saidenberg Symphonietta.

In addition to Bloch, Hans Lange has listed two other contemporary composers, Honegger and Kodály, on the midweek programs, and has added Schubert's Fifth symphony to the downtown repertory. The work is not entirely new to the orchestra, however, as John Barbirolli included it on a Ravinia program in 1940.

Wednesday at 3:45.
Young People's Program.
Mr. Lange, conducting.

Overture, "Fingal's Cave" .... Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Storm scene from "The Barber of Seville" .... Rossini
"The Storm" from Symphony No. 6 .... Beethoven
Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla, from "Das Rheingold" .... Wagner
"Caisson Song" [artillery song] ......
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" .... Wagner

Thursday at 8:15—Friday at 2:15.
Mr. Lange, conducting.

Symphony No. 5, B-flat major ...... Schubert
Suite for Viola and Orchestra .... Bloch
Milton Preves, soloist.
Symphonic Poem, "Pastorale d'été" .... Honegger
Suite from "Háry János" .... Kodaly

Saturday at 8:15.
Popular concert, Mr. Lange, conducting.

Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra. . Corelli
Symphony No. 3, A minor, "Scotch" .... Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau" ... Smetana
Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" .... Tchaikowsky

The orchestra plays in Milwaukee Monday night, with Edmund Kurtz, first cellist, playing the Dvorak concerto in which he had successful Chicago appearances earlier in the season.

The Chicago Business Men's orchestra, meanwhile, announces Mr. Preves as its soloist at Orchestra hall Tuesday night, Feb. 16, when he will play the Handel concerto for viola on a program with one of Beethoven's "Leonore" overtures, Schumann's Fourth symphony, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

Known in Chicago only as an uncommonly beautiful knight of the rose in Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier," which she sang with the Chicago Opera in 1940, Risë Stevens returns today in a song program which includes two pieces written for her by Jaromir Weinberger of "Schwanda" fame.

Born in New York of Norwegian and American parentage, Miss Stevens at 17 was leading lady for a comic opera series then being staged in New York. The late Anna Schoen-René heard her and offered to teach her in a tradition that stemmed back to Viardot-Garcia and Malibran. Subsequently she won a Juilliard scholarship, declined a Metropolitan contract because of inexperience, and eventually made her opera debut at the Prague Opera house as "Mignon."

This led to engagements in Vienna, at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires, at the Metropolitan in New York, and to that single appearance in Chicago.

"Bois épais" .... Lully
"I Attempt from Love's Sickness to Fly" .... Purcell
Habanera from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Widmung .... Schumann
"In dem Schatten meiner Locken" ..... Wolf
"Sonntag" .... Brahms
"Meine Liebe ist grün" .... Brahms

[b] Jeux d'eau .... Ravel
Mr. Ulanowsky.
Pilgrim's Song .... Tschaikowsky
"Conversation" .... Weinberger
"Olympia" .... Weinberger
"Tune Thy Fiddle, Gypsy" .... Dvorák
"In the Silence of the Night" . Rachmaninoff
"Roving in the Dew" .... Butterworth
"Little Jack Horner" [with apologies to Handel] .... Diack
"Command" .... Kingsford

Margaret Speaks, who has won more radio polls than you can shake a microphone at, is a soprano from Ohio who began her musical career in a New York show, toured with a small opera troupe, won a radio audition, and there found her career. Nicolai Malko will surround her Wednesday night with a concert which holds one Chicago novelty, "A Negro Parade," written in 1931 by Lamar Stringfield, the North Carolina composer of "Moods of a Moonshiner," "Legend of John Henry," and other works. The program:

Overture to "Der Freischütz" .... Weber
Symphony No. 2, D major .... Brahms
[a] "Tu lo sai" .... Torelli
[b] "Depuis le jour," from "Louise" .... Charpentier
[c] "Ouvre ton coeur" .... Bizet
Miss Speaks.
"A Negro Parade" .... Stringfield
First Chicago performance.
Polka and Fugue from "Schwanda" .... Weinberger

Probably every music reviewing department should have an echo department, devoted to repercussions.

For instance, Hans Lange sends word that Désiré Defauw picked his own program for the Theodore Thomas memorial concerts. No one sends word why a visitor was permitted to conduct such inappropriate music for an occasion always given stature by the late Frederick Stock.

For another instance, two indignant ladies have telephoned to tell me I did less than justice to the debut of the Chicago Piano Symphony orchestra. I think they are right. I merely said it was below professional standards, which it was. I said nothing about the moonlight spotlight cast on "Clair de Lune" or the deep purple spot cast on "Deep Purple." Nor did I tell one word about the nosegay to piano tuners which was printed in the program. It goes like this: "Tuners are the gardeners in the landscape of music. They remove the weeds of discord so that the buds of sweet sound shall blossom into harmony."

TO APPEAR AS SOLOIST

Margaret Speaks, well known soprano of the radio, will appear as soloist with the Woman's Symphony orchestra at Orchestra hall Wednesday evening, under the direction of Nicolai Malko.

Al Jolson, whose last production was the musical "Hold on to Your Hats" in 1940, is seriously thinking of opening a producer's office. 'Something for the Boys' Brings Merman to Broadway

New Musical May Prove Hit of the Season

By Burns Mantle.

New York [Special].—Miss Ethel Merman, by your leave, is again a queen of Broadway. Panama Hattie, having taken time out to become the mother of a fine girl, is back, pretending, this time, to be a snappy little defense worker from Newark, N. J., who is discovered by the court of missing heirs to be part owner of a ranch deep in the heart of Texas. At least, it abuts Kelly flying field.

Ethel Merman.

"Something for the Boys" is the title of the new number. At this writing it gives every indication of proving to be the outstanding musical comedy hit of this particular season.

They are the most exciting of Broadway adventures, these overnight hits in the theater. Even in war time the playboys and playgirls attend them in force and cheer them with enthusiasm. The effect is electrical; it can be felt the length of the show lanes. At least, that is the way to describe it. What happens really is that each personally cheered first-nighter imagines that his evening's release from the prevailing emotional depressions is universal.

Anyway, Broadway stood greatly in need of a smashing theater success and here it is. Thanks largely to the erstwhile Astoria stenographer who is to star. Miss Merman never has seemingly been in better health or spirits, nor has her particular brand of rowdy comedy been more gusty or more free from dips into the dirt barrels that have sometimes colored it.

"Something for the Boys" was written by Herbert and Dorothy Fields. Their brother, Joseph, has just scored with "The Doughgirls," which puts the late Lew Fields' progeny well up among the upper tax paying bracketeers. It is blessed with songs by Cole Porter. The ensemble numbers, I assume, were also inspired by him. The songs are lively, smart, faintly suggestive, and heavy with the kind of melody the Merman type of singer delights in.

The difference between a hit musical comedy and one that fails is often found in the story. It doesn't have to be a very good story, but it does have to be reasonably sane. Brother and Sister Fields start "Something for the Boys" with three vignettes introducing Chiquita Hart, a burlesque actress; Harry Hart, a pitchman selling gadgets at carnivals, and Blossom Hart, the defense worker before mentioned. They are three heirs to a Texas ranch, and their situation establishes both an imaginative and sound foundation for comedy adventure.

When the Fields take the heirs to Texas with fond hopes of collecting millions from their oil lands, only to find that all they have inherited is a wide, sweeping prairie and a ranch house that looks like something "out of 'Tobacco Road,' they have built sensibly on that same foundation.

After that they can run wild with incidental plots if they want to. And they do. The Hart girls turn the ranch house into a boarding house, which is closed by the colonel in command at Kelly field the moment he becomes suspicious of the chorus that moves in.

A senator's daughter who arrives as a rich war worker to take over the enterprise and is revealed as the rival for the handsome army band leader Miss Merman has picked for herself, is immediately given a razzle dazzle that keeps the audience laughing.

Finally, with everything looking dark, Ethel discovers that because of a deposit of carborundum on a tooth filling she has become a living radio reception set and pretty valuable in war work. This gives an excuse for a bomber flight to Washington and a striking scenic finish for "Something for the Boys."

The song hits include "Could It Be You," "Hey, Good Lookin'," "He's a Right Guy," "I'm in Love with a Soldier Boy," and a character number, "By the Mississinewa," with which Miss Merman and Paula Lawrence stop the proceedings nightly.

Allen Jenkins.

Allen Jenkins, a favorite picture comic, is the comedian and well liked. Bill Johnson is the band leader and popular. It is a large cast, and the talent average is high. Michael Todd is the producer, and it is the best thing he has done.

Switching from the popular to the startling, I must tell you about a side street production last week that caused quite a bit of conversation. This was a two act drama written by Alexander King, artist and editor, entitled "Night Watch in Syria." Herein the story of the crucifixion is told mostly by the Roman soldiers who had witnessed it, and in the language and dress of the present. To them it was no more than the execution of a fanatic, and they wondered at many of the events immediately following.

Mary of Magdala has already begun her search for the disciples who were afraid to show their faces. In that search she can only find Peter, miserable over his denial of the Savior. She goes to the home of Joseph of Arimathea and finds him sympathetic but helpless. She searches water front inns and places where fishermen gather. Here and there she picks up wondering people touched with the beauty and hope of the Christian leader's teachings. She finds Lazarus protesting being raised from the dead, which was at least a peaceful sleep. And finally, just before morning, she finds the mother of one of the thieves Jesus had blessed.

Any break with the traditional telling of the sacred story is at first a shock, but, for the better part of its unfolding, "Night Watch in Syria" is absorbing in a speculative sense. The reaction of the Roman publicans, sinners, and plain citizens must have been, certainly could have been, as Mr. King visions it. The fact that it is both easier and much more comfortable to accept the report of the Bible historians than it is a translation of their stories into commonplace, frequently ugly, and occasionally profane English of today should not deny those who wish, with reverence, to speculate on this history a right to do so. We may not hear again of "Night Watch in Syria," but it was an interesting adventure in the experimental theater.

Notes of the Theater

"Watch on the Rhine" begins a return engagement limited to two weeks at the Selwyn theater tonight. When Lillian Hellman's stirring drama was presented here last May, many customers were turned away because the allotted three weeks did not begin to take care of the number of Chicagoans who wanted to see the play. The three leading parts are still in the hands of Paul Lukas, Lucile Watson, and Mady Christians. All but four of the other rôles are still played by the original actors. In March "Watch on the Rhine" will celebrate the completion of its second year. Two companies are now acting the drama in England, one in London and the other touring the provinces.

"The Eve of St. Mark," fresh from a triumphant fortnight in Detroit, reaches the Harris theater tomorrow evening. The central juvenile rôle of Pvt. Quizz West, one of the year's most enviable parts, has been awarded to a newcomer, John Dall. Cyrilla Dorn plays his fiancée, Janet Feller. Both Mr. Dorn and Miss West are former Chicagoans. Other one time Chicagoans in the cast are Owen Jordan, Mary Ann Bestor and Tom Daly. "The Eve of St. Mark" is presented by the Playwrights' company. The late Lem Ward directed the New York company, upon whose performance the present one is based. Howard Bay designed the settings, and Moe Hack conceived the much praised lighting effects.

Ruth Draper, the incomparable solo actress comes to the Civic theater for a single performance next Sunday afternoon. Her program will consist of one hilarious piece from her familiar repertory, "Doctors and Diets," and three novelties—"The Actress," "Three Women and Mr. Clifford," and "Vive la France—1940." Miss Draper writes all her own material, and acts it with such power, humor, and beauty that one of her performances often is more rewarding than the acting of an entire stage full of people. In her entire career she has appeared only once in a play with other actors, "A Lady's Name," in which she acted in London in 1916 with Marie Tempest and Beryl Mercer.

Last night's mass exodus of five plays leaves two of our principal theaters untenanted for the next fortnight. The Erlanger, where Zasu Pitts clung on bravely for two weeks in "Her First Murder," will be uninhabited until the return of "Life with Father" on Feb. 1. The Studebaker, left vacant by the departure of "Porgy and Bess" for St. Louis, relights Jan. 31 with the Gilbert and Sullivan specialists known as the Boston Comic Opera company.

The Goodman theater continues to offer Sidney Howard's "The Late Christopher Bean" nightly [except Monday] thru Saturday. Beginning next Sunday John Van Druten's "There's Always Juliet" will be given for a period indefinitely described as "a few performances." You have to be subsidized to afford that kind of publicity.

Remember "Thanks for My Wife," which came here from the west coast, stayed six weeks at the Selwyn, then changed its name to "Separate Rooms" and remained more than a year in New York? Alan Dinehart and Joseph Carole, two of the collaborators in the writing of it, are at work on a new play. Called "Salutary Lodge," it is about a Nazi surgeon, and contains parts for Mr. Dinehart and his wife, Mozelle Britton.

Thomas Mann Broadcasts to Germans: 'Stop Helping Hitler'

"LISTEN, GERMANY," by Thomas Mann. [Knopf, $1.50.]

Reviewed by Dr. Melchior Palyi.

"Listen, Germany!" by the great Thomas Mann, and "Listen, Hans," by Dorothy Thompson [reviewed in these columns a few weeks ago], have an astonishing amount in common. Both contain short-wave broadcasts addressed to Germany, and they try to convey similar messages.

Of course, there are differences. Mr. Mann writes English [or is it German?] infinitely better than Miss Thompson does, and much more concisely. He can say in three words what takes her 9 to 11. [The figures may not be exact.] But she is much more polite, and [probably because she is a lady] doesn't use half as harsh words as he does.

To Thomas Mann the Nazis are not just "criminal men of violence," but a "handful of stupid criminals." [Stupid and criminal, all right, but a handful?] He calls them a "pack of outlaws," speaks of Hitler's "defective brain" [so defective, by the way, that it almost conquered Europe], and sneers at his humor here as "idiotic and obscene." The representatives of Hitler ["to hell with them"] are "a menagerie," Goebbels in particular "the loud-mouthed liar." "Bloody hypocrite," "scoundrel," "crook," "blind adventurer," "a wretch," "most godless of all creatures," and "pathological mendacity" are some of the epithets for the fuehrer whom "not even a dog continues to trust."

The most descriptive adjective is used for Hitler's voice: it is that "of a raging dog." Probably the most original title Hitler ever earned is this: he is "the only incarnation on earth of bolshevism in the most obscene sense of the word." What will Stalin say to that?

The living German classic writer uses a language closer akin to the one customary among Nazis than to the style of Goethe and Schiller. However, this is, or should be, propaganda. Mann calls on his former compatriots to "deny him [Hitler] your hands and stop helping!" But he also tells them that they are not likely to do so. At one time the Nazis are a mere handful of torturers who tyrannize Germany. At another the German people themselves are made responsible.

Mann propagandizes the Germans in a curious fashion. He promises "the world of freedom and justice which awaits you"; membership in "a united world pacified in freedom and depoliticized by the evaporation of national sovereignties" [congress will have to say something about that]; "a world order with equal rights and equal duties for all." On the other hand, he admits that all this could not be done "in a trice." "Honor and equality of rights will have to wait." "A long quarantine . . . will be inevitable." Some propaganda to tell the Germans that "it will indeed be no pleasure, after this war, to be a German!"

Maybe it isn't the Germans at all who are to be propagandized. After all, the book is in English. Passages such as this have little to do with what the author calls the Germany of Dürer and Bach, Goethe and Beethoven: "The true voice of America is that of President Roosevelt, whose reëlection . . . was probably the decisive event of this war." [Is this a slap at Willkie?] The President of the United States is "a statesman, the best, the wisest, and most clear-headed statesman," and so on.

It is unfair to quote Thomas Mann piecemeal. One must read him chapter by chapter. Each of them is a fine piece of literary composition. Never mind the logic of it all.

Sinclair Pens Another Tale of Lanny Budd

"WIDE IS THE GATE," by Upton Sinclair. [Viking.]

Reviewed by William Shinnick.

This is a fat work of 751 pages and is about virtually everything that happened in Europe between the early days of Hitler's supremacy at home to the end of the Spanish civil war.

The normal way for novelists to proceed is to use background as the board on which to portray the development, for good or worse, of character. Sinclair's formula is to use a character to portray background. By his own announcement he is a historian writing in fiction form because he was trained in novelizing for 49 years.

His nominal protagonist is Lanny Budd, an American art dealer who knows everybody worth knowing in Europe, from the expatriated Americans to Hitler and Goering, and uses them and the money he makes by buying and selling art to the one end of helping his friends, who may be described as leftists, Reds, or communists.

At the time the book takes off, Lanny Budd is married to Irma Barnes, daughter of an American utility magnate. They part because—and one judges quite reasonably—his wife objects to Budd going on long, dangerous journeys in which he mingles art and conspiracy. At the end he is in loving union with a lady German commie whom he had smuggled out of Naziland with Irma's assistance.

Some of the more interesting episodes of this work come when Budd meets the great and the near great—Basil Zaharoff, the Greek salesman of munitions who won enormous wealth and the honor of being addressed as Sir Basil; Goering, who helps things along by selling to Budd pictures he had come by in shady transactions; Leon Blum, the weak kneed pinko premier of France, and others who had some influence in helping Europe to go to Hades in a wheelbarrow. He is even entertained by Adolf Hitler at Berchtesgaden.

Sinclair's book is hard to evaluate. As a connected story of an era, told by a historian who doesn't have to submit himself to the criticism of other historians, it is pleasing reading. It tells a lot and it is plausible as informal news. Perhaps it is inevitable that a fictional character meeting historical characters leaves the fiction lad looking a little stiff and acting a bit wooden, even when he is performing heroic feats.

This is the author's fourth novel about Lanny Budd and his associates. The series has carried these characters all the way from 1914 to 1937. Still more books along the same vein are promised.

BOOKMAN'S HOLIDAY

By Charles Collins.

BOOK received [surprise!]: "Lords of the Levee," by Lloyd Wendt and Herman Kogan [Bobbs-Merrill]. Publication date, Feb. 1. Subtitle, "The Story of Bathhouse John and Hinky Dink."

It happens that we saw this book under construction, as it were, and watched it grow from jottings on a reporter's pads to a majestic pile of typescript, about a foot high. We cheered young Mr. Wendt as he clacked away on his typewriter thru many hours of overtime in this newspaper office, and saluted young Mr. Kogan as he dashed in now and then, like a king's courier, bearing fresh information from the badlands to feed his collaborator.

Yes, we watched a book pass thru its birthpangs, and it was an inspiring spectacle, altho nothing like a motion picture. Now we hold the finished product in our hands, and announce that it ought to be Chicago's Book of the Year. . . . At last report, Mr. Wendt was taking up naval research at Dartmouth college as a lieutenant [j. g.].

The jacket of "Lords of the Levee" is the work of Gary Sheahan, a veteran of THE TRIBUNE's editorial art department. He should know his Chicago, because his grandfather, James W. Sheahan, was a former TRIBUNE editorial writer, who wrote, with George P. Upton, the earliest and one of the best histories of the Chicago fire. Furthermore, Artist Sheahan is named after his maternal grandfather, Judge Joseph E. Gary, who presided at the trial of the Chicago anarchists.

Sheahan's design for this jacket contains a sketch of a man-about-town ascending the steps of a house bearing the number 2131. Supply Dearborn street, and you have the address of the extinct Everleigh club, now a junk heap.

The word "blurb," meaning the publisher's proclamation on a book jacket, always of an ecstatic nature, was invented by Gelett Burgess. Vincent Starrett once used this Americanism in the presence of Gilbert K. Chesterton, visiting Englishman of letters, who pricked up his ears and demanded an explanation. When he was told what "blurb" meant, Mr. Chesterton pronounced it a perfect blend of sound and meaning, and jotted it down for future use.

The blurb of "Laura," by Vera Caspary [Houghton Mifflin] contains a new word—"psychothriller." We welcome this addition to the language of the bookshop, because we are weary of "murder mystery" and hostile to the smart alecky "whodunit." Only first rate yarns, with sound psychology behind their mysteries, deserve to be called "psychothrillers."

This "Laura" jacket is an excellent example of blurb writing. It contains a reading list of "psychothrillers" which deserves to be passed on to the connoisseurs. It's a roll of honor:

"The Lodger," "Repeat Performance," "Verdict of Twelve," "Ladies in Retirement," "Deadlier than the Male," "The Uninvited," "The Phantom Lady," "Hangover Square," "Payment Deferred," "Rebecca," "Harriet," "Brighton Rock," "Night Over Fitch's Pond," and "Dagger of the Mind." . . . Observe "Payment Deferred"; its dramatization caused Charles Laughton's rise to Hollywood renown.

"Behind the Japanese Mask," by Jesse F. Steiner [Macmillan], may be recommended to readers who are eager to know how the Japanese got that way. The author spent seven years on the faculty of a college in Japan. He has taught in nine American universities, including the University of Chicago, as a sociologist. His career also includes a term as assistant superintendent of United Charities work in the stockyards district of Chicago.

The reviewer who gets "The Greek Reader," by A. L. Whall [Doubleday, Doran], may consider himself honored and his library handsomely enlarged. It is an anthology of ancient Greek poetry and prose which skims the choicest honey off the Hellenic amphorae.

'Happy Land' Thrilling Tale of Midwest

"HAPPY LAND," by MacKinlay Kantor. [Coward-McCann, $1.25.]

Reviewed by Maureen Daly.

This is the story of small town happiness that grew into big time courage. It is a story about ordinary folks and how they came to be brave.

It is the story of Rusty Marsh, an only son, a boy who played football, got black eyes and high school crushes like any other American boy. He lived on a street with arching elms and maple trees, ate Sunday dinners of meat loaf, escalloped potatoes and sliced tomatoes, and played croquet on the back lawn with the neighbor girl on warm summer evenings. He grew up in the days before Hitler's name filled the headlines and men's faces grew thoughtful and grave as they listened to radio news broadcasts. When Hitler had gone crashing into Poland and war trembled thru all Europe, Rusty had finished high school and gone downstate to pharmacy college.

"Eventually I'll qualify for my license. Then when the war is over and the world is running smoothly . . ." he had said.

But in 1942 the world wasn't at peace and it wasn't running smoothly. Rusty was barely 21 when he enlisted. His father thought that not many boys of Rusty's age could achieve the rating of 1st class pharmacist's mate as readily as he had done.

His father thought a lot of Rusty. The house was quiet when he had gone, and the empty hours of evening were filled with thinking, the restless rustle of the newspapers, and the half hearted exchange of small talk.

Then one day, somewhere in the Pacific, there was a battle. Days later the ringing of the front doorbell, the little messenger girl with her pale face and staring eyes, and a telegram that began: "The navy department deeply regrets to inform you . . ."

MacKinlay Kantor, veteran of a dozen novels and innumerable short stories, has turned out here, in words of precision accuracy and thoughts of simple honesty, a clear, thrilling record of a middle class, middle western American family, the kind of life they lived in peace, and the kind of life they learned to live in war. It is the expression of the feelings of a whole nation, with a truth that makes it both timely and lasting.

As long as there are boys who live and die like Rusty Marsh—that life is worth fighting for.

Ringside View of Warfare in Solomons

"BATTLE FOR THE SOLOMONS," by Ira Wolfert. [Houghton Mifflin.]

Reviewed by James Gray.

Sly, breezy Ira Wolfert, Brooklyn born and Broadway educated, was just the man to send to cover the battle of the Solomons. For he saw "our fellows," not thru any haze of hero worship but exactly as they were in the heat of a struggle for life, "man children," who bit on the iron of their danger and did not "get all girly and goosey" every time there was a chance of being killed.

It is good to have from Mr. Wolfert first hand accounts of those bitter, bloody triumphs of the Solomons. He is skilful at that sort of thing. The Japanese, in their various attempts to retake Guadalcanal, arranged their attacks neatly, so that a newspaper man in a ringside seat on the shore missed little that went on. What he couldn't see from the ground, Wolfert saw by taking to the air whenever the pilots would allow him to go up. He was right in the midst of an impromptu duel with one of the Japanese navy's biggest and best four motored bombers.

But better still than the author's ability to dramatize the fighting on those uncomfortable, malaria ridden, mosquito infested islands is his group portrait of the men who take all the dangers and discomforts in their stride. They are proud and casual and good natured and almost universally humorous.

The pilot of a giant plane that got into bad weather and "bounced . . . like a bird in a hot badminton game" mopped his face as he struggled with the controls and said: "I kept wondering if I had remembered to bring my reflexes along." A lieutenant who had had to land his plane on the sea found that the provisions he had thought to be loaded onto it had gone to the bottom. There he was, he said, "riding the Pacific bareback."

An ensign who bounced 30 feet high and 60 feet away when a torpedo hit the Wasp reported afterward that the noise of the explosion sounded "something like a railroad train going up a flight of stairs." Listening to a radio report of how an objective in France had been bombed by 115 Flying Fortresses with fighter support, the six pilots of Fortresses that had gone out alone the same day against 36 Japanese warships looked at each other wistfully. Said one: "Holy crock! Think of getting fighter support! Bombing with fighter support would be like coasting down a hill in January."

Their nerves and their spirits were indestructible. When they fought these 18 year olds looked 40. They were grim enough under the impact of actual fighting. Or else they were just intensely preoccupied, with their mouths "all puckered up with the thought like earnest students in school" as they worked out their difficult technical problems right in the midst of gunfire. Yet they retained an engaging naiveté which made the natives delight in any casual contact. The boys sat down on the floors of huts and tried earnestly to learn the islanders' art of stringing shells together. And when the planes landed with supplies, the boys came whooping down like yokels, delighted to see the 5:15 pull into the station back home.

Wolfert does not overlook the evidence that the Japanese are fanatical fighters, ready to run any insane risk. They are, therefore, a tough enemy. But he has seen nothing to persuade him that, with such fighting men as we have, with such spirit, with such resolve, and with the support of our production capacity, we can possibly lose our fight in the Pacific.

Tho he is way off his Broadway beat, Wolfert has done in this book his best job of reporting.

Conflict Runs Thru Story of Mixed Bloods

"ARROWS INTO THE SUN," by Jonreed Lauritzen. [Knopf, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Richard Sullivan.

"'It would be shooting arrows into the sun,' Lean Wolf had answered when Sigor had said once that they should kill all the white men." It is out of this strife in the American past, this conflict between Indian and white, Navajo and Mormon—out of those many arrows shot into the sun—that this first novel by Jonreed Lauritzen draws its rich and significant substance.

"Arrows Into the Sun" is the story of the youth Sigor, three-quarters white, one-quarter Navajo, in whose very bloodstream the conflict pulsates with such turbulence that neither the native hogan nor the white settlement can bring him peace.

The romance between Sigor and Mormon girl Hallie Lang, which makes up the body of the book, in addition to being a fine piece of sustained narrative, is in a sense the same conflict objectified: drawn by the white girl's beauty, the youth is repelled by the community of which Hallie is a part; back among his mother's people he feels himself and is felt by the Navajos, to be an alien. Yet this book is not the mere negative statement of irreconciliables; one of its most powerful effects is the feeling of fusion achieved at the end—the sense of two persons, two races, two heritages coming together after intense and bloody stress, merging to make a new heritage.

Sigor is rendered with complete understanding. From the pathetic scene in which he goes to the dance wearing his tight new store clothes to the violent scene in which he grapples with an eagle and kills it bare handed, he remains a figure of strong, urgent dignity. Hallie Lang is that rare girl, a heroine with humor as well as beauty, a sensitive, attractive, and consistently real person. The many other characters may be summed up by saying there seems nothing false about any of them.

In treating Indians, Mormons, physical background of desert and canyon, and historical background of the 1860s, Jonreed Lauritzen seems always to know whereof he writes. The book has a good, steady feeling of authenticity, which becomes the more impressive both when one considers the technical difficulty of re-creating the past so convincingly that the contemporary reader may share in it, and when one remembers the many novels, treating past or present, which fail altogether to sound the true authentic note.

The writing thruout is full of beauty and power. In the sections from Hallie's diary there is a fresh directness which is in its way quite as effective as the more rhythmic and rich prose of the narrative about Sigor. Perhaps in some few spots this richer prose becomes a little spread out; perhaps Sigor's wavering is a little too much extended. But these are small objections to make to a first novel of very real distinction.

AMONG THE AUTHORS

By Frederic Babcock.

BILL ZIFF came back to Chicago last week to tell about the past, present, and future of aerial warfare. . . . He told his story to a full house at a luncheon of the Advertising Men's post of the American Legion. . . . And his message was so compelling that scarcely a man moved in the course of the hour's speech.

It was not so many years ago that William B. Ziff was a comparatively unknown Chicago magazine publisher. . . . Then one of his magazines, Aeronautics, printed Billy Mitchell's first article, and this article helped cause the explosion that later led to Gen. Mitchell's court martial for his efforts to make America a first class air power. . . . Ziff took up the cause, but managed to stay pretty much in the background until last July, when his "The Coming Battle of Germany" caused another explosion. . . . In that book he insisted that air power alone could bring about victory over the axis powers. . . . "Our resolution, strength, and powers," he wrote, "will finally be put to the acid test in one of two struggles—the coming battle of America, or the coming battle of Germany. Either would be the crucial battle of 5,000 years of written history." . . . He told how, in his opinion, that struggle could be decided. . . . After that he was something of a national figure.

William B. Ziff.

Now president of a successful book and magazine publishing house in New York, Ziff is continuing his crusade. . . . And the crusade started by Billy Mitchell and carried on by Ziff, Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky, and others is beginning to show results. . . . America is on the wing.

The author-publisher's talk is full of epigrams and terse comments. . . . Here are a few of them: "The only thing easy in war is to lose it." . . . "I look askance at the title, 'expert.' An expert is any damn fool more than 50 miles from home." . . . "America has made a transition to the air age in one year of super-human effort. Soon it will impose sanity on a crazy world, and lock that world in safely in airplanes." . . . "The combined air forces of the allies will have 3 million men before the end of 1943. We'll wreck the axis countries and then invade them." . . . "Our warning to Germany and Japan: Whatever we have done, we are going to do better. The time is certainly coming when we shall occupy both of those countries from the air." . . . "Our enemies are the toughest, orneriest critters we've ever gone up against. But before the end of this year they're going to discover that they are presumptuous amateurs at the business of waging aerial warfare."

Still in his early 40s, Ziff has failed to let the years of rebuffing dampen his enthusiasm. . . . It has taken a long time to get his ideas accepted [some of them haven't yet been adopted by the higherups], but, as long as he believes he's on the right track, he intends to keep going. . . . He spends nearly all his waking hours in talking and writing about aviation. . . . He has traveled all over Europe and America to gather and expound his formulas for victory, and he says he'll stick to his self-imposed task until all of his ideas have been put into practice.

Story Eerie, but Not Too Unrealistic

"THE CASE OF THE WEIRD SISTERS," by Charlotte Armstrong. [Coward-McCann, $2.]

Reviewed by Drexel Drake.

Stark characterization and subtle dramatic quality provide something out of the ordinary for mystery readers in this novel. It is a story that is grippingly spooky without getting beyond the realm of reality. It is refreshingly original, managing to sustain interest without melodrama or spectacle.

The beginning is simple enough: Innes Whitlock, Chicago millionaire, and his secretary, Alice Brennan, who was to become his bride, started for his camp in Michigan in his limousine, driven by his chauffeur, Fred. A mishap to the motor caused a stopover at Whitlock's childhood home, a decadent mansion in an almost abandoned Michigan mining town. The occupants of the house now were his three maiden half sisters, all in their 50s, one of them blind, the second deaf and of cracked tendencies, the third without her left arm. The servants included an oddly repulsive Mr. Johnson.

Whitlock introduced his bride to be, foreshadowing a new beneficiary of his estate. Then things began to happen: a lamp dropped from an upper floor, attempted asphyxiation, poison, with Whitlock invariably the intended victim. It became the job of Prof. MacDougal Duff to tear the veil off the grotesque situation, with Fred as his able assistant.

This commendable work of exotic characterization is marred only by that of the heroine, Alice, who begins in the not admirable rôle of scheming a marriage for money and gains little in character from later brush strokes.

"MURDER DOWN UNDER," by Arthur W. Upfield. [Doubleday, Doran, $2.]

This constitutes the debut, before American readers, of a mystery author who has established himself in Australia. He writes with satisfying competence in an easy style typical of the English countryside murder mystery. Australian vernacular, not difficult to grasp, adds a happy tone.

The author's detective hero is the thoro, painstaking, always confident Detective Inspector Napoleon Bonaparte, for whom Detective Sergt. Muir is both stooge and protégé. The scene is Western Australia. George Loftus, farmer, fails to return to his home after his car is disabled late at night. There is no evidence of a crime, no immediate explanation of the disappearance. But the detective inspector, shrewd in building from minor details, mingles with the workers of the community, learns of the odd business enterprise of one Mr. Jelly, and opens up cross trails that solve the puzzle.

This is the unhurried type of tale that relies for its interest on ingenuity in detecting, interesting characterization, and a sound plot.

"MURDER PLAIN AND FANCY," by Garland Lord. [Doubleday, Doran, $2.]

The Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Sumac, Wis. [population, 1,022], offering consolation to Sheila Scott, actress, anent the tragic death of her Aunt Frances, said: "Sad. Most sad." Some hours and 40 pages later, Mayor McKee of Sumac, moved by similar noble impulse, said to Sheila: "What a pity—what a dreadful pity that we should meet at such a sad hour."

By those passages and much more from the same lexicon, the author provides small town background for a murder puzzle. It never gets heavy, because romance bubbles from first page to last. There is a clever and surprising twist in the plot, but, as a dramatic critic might lament, it deserved a better cast and better lines.

W. C. Fields Has Idea for New Comedy Film

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—While filming "Tales of Manhattan" Twentieth Century-Fox spent thousands of dollars photographing an extremely funny temperance sequence featuring W. C. Fields, which was finally eliminated because it was too incongruous with the heavy drama of the rest of the film. Now Fields is trying to persuade the studio to dig out the discarded sequence from the moth balls, shoot several reels of other funny scenes, and splice them all together as one comedy film.

Good Morning!

This is a tribute to the United States army medical corps—the brave men and women who work under fire at the front and bring healing and cheer to our fighting lads.

What a pair of really swell, all around troupers Jane Wyatt and James Ellison are! They've never been "big time" in billing, but they're certainly that as to performance. . . . And right here I want t ogive a hand to Kent Taylor and to James Burke for characterizations aptly and sympathetically interpreted.

The entire picture is a workmanlike and believable one. . . . Nothing particularly unusual about the story angles. Two men and a girl; bravery; bombs; gallant laughter camoflauging searing emotions of varied sorts. A tale of tireless, day by day achievement against bitter odds. One that hits you where you live and at the same time gives you a lift.

The main characters of this opus see two wars. . . . Most of the action relates to the first world conflict during which Dr. Mason meets, works with and marries Dr. Beth Ainsley, sent out to assist him care for the wounded. . . . Thru her intercession with her superior Mason is enabled to establish a hospital in the front lines. . . . Up to that time the colonel had been adamant in refusal.

One good job done — some peaceful living in between—and then Dr. and Mrs. Mason forge forth once more to give their all in this war.

See you tomorrow.

This Town Called Hollywood - - - By Philip Scheuer

Thanks to Warner Brothers promotion, people hearing about "the fat man" usually think of Sidney Greenstreet. I could name half a dozen other celebrated screen figures who meet the description—but why borrow trouble. Suffice it that, for the time being at least, Mr. G. has inherited the mantle of the first "fat man" of moving pictures, John Bunny.

Sidney Greenstreet.

Consulted last week on the matter, Greenstreet admitted that he finds the appellation distasteful. "Besides," he said, "I have dropped 40 pounds since I played 'The Maltese Falcon.' Always been athletic, you know; golf regularly."

I countered with the suggestion that a "trade mark," readily identifiable, will do more to put an actress across than anything else.

Greenstreet nodded understandingly. "With the masses," he agreed. "I have no objection if it makes them happy."

Studio intimates assert that he tipped the scales at 280 when he was first weighed in. If he has lost 40 pounds since then, he would now be 240.

Greenstreet looked pretty hefty to me—tho he is comparatively fast on his feet and jumps to them frequently, as if to prove that laziness isn't necessarily a concomitant of girth.

Another thing that bothers him is the fact that Warners has typed him, figuratively as well as literally, as a heavy. For an average of 30 of his 40 years on the stage he played comedy. That was natural, since fat men are proverbially funny. But "The Maltese Falcon" changed all that. John Huston, the director, wanted him for the rôle of Gutman, dealer in curious curios, and Jack Warner clinched it by phone. That was two years ago. Up to then Greenstreet had steadfastly refused all Hollywood offers; the theater was his life.

It still is, in all probability, altho he confesses the cinema fascinates him. There are, in a manner of speaking, other compensations. "I have signed more autograph books in front of the Brown Derby in five minutes than I did in the theater in five years," he marveled.

Greenstreet is still afraid of what he calls "the lens." The lens can show what a man is actually thinking, and there is no need for him to raise his voice. That is why Greenstreet insists on a prolonged study before he will even consent to play a part. He respects actors who can, as he says, "wing it"—step into a scene with little or no rehearsal—but declares that he isn't one of them. His directors, he acknowledges, have been pretty nice about this so far—notably Huston and Michael Curtiz, who guided his black market merchant thru the mazes of "Casablanca."

Then there is the business of "Business." "On the stage you have four to six weeks to work out your every move; by the time the curtain goes up, it's automatic with you. You can concentrate everything on building your scene. Of course, stage acting is cumulative, while in the studio it's cut up into fragments. But the idea is the same."

Greenstreet believes films suffer from too few rehearsals. "Let us say I offer you a cigaret. Gō to a bookcase, take out a book and bring it to you," he illustrated. "If I have to give all my time and thought to that, I am bound to detract from the character I'm supposed to be creating. You can't fool that lens!"

Warners' Mr. Five by Five has appeared additionally in "Across the Pacific," "They Died with Their Boots On," and "Background to Danger." Except for his bit as Gen. Winfield Scott in "Boots," all his types have been shady if not downright sinister. In "Devotion," currently filming, he is permitted some lighter moments as the punctilious William Makepeace Thackeray, who escorts Charlotte Bronte [Olivia de Havilland] around London town. For this dispensation he is profoundly grateful.

ALL GIRL ORCHESTRA . . . .

'Hitler's Children' Will Be Shown at Palace January 20

"Hitler's Children," screen version of Gregor Ziemer's book, "Education for Death," with Tim Holt and Bonita Granville in the leading rôles, will have a special showing at the Palace theater on Wednesday, Jan. 20, at 8:45 p. m. This event will be in conjunction with Allied Nations' week and tickets for the performance are being handled by the various allied nations' relief committees of Chicago.

This film story portrays the true Nazi German of today—the fearless, startling, dramatic and "inside" story of how Hitler molds boys and girls into fanatical fighters for Nazi world conquest.

The Martins—Mary and Marion—Most Confusing

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Mary Martin and Marion Martin both came to Hollywood from New York musical shows in 1939. Mary made a hit in her underthings in "Leave It to Me" and Marion in even less in the "Scandals" and "Follies." Now, for the first time, both are in the same picture, "Star Spangled Rhythm." And are folks confused!

Carver Did Not Live to See Story of His Life Published

By Harry Hansen.

New York.

WHEN George Washington Carver, the famous agronomist of Tuskegee, died a few days ago, Mrs. Rackham Holt of Chicago had just put the finishing touches on the manuscript of his biography and Doubleday, Doran & Co. was sending it to the printer. For three years she had worked on it, patiently constructing the life story of one of the most interesting and useful practical scientists America has developed. Author and publisher had planned to present the completed book to Carver at Founder's day exercises at Tuskegee, April 4. But Carver was not to live to see it.

I don't suppose Carver could be rushed, for all his life he was calm and unhurried, and maybe that is why he did so much for agriculture. Born the son of slaves, Carver had the humility of a man of great gifts. I was at Tuskegee once on Founder's day and had a talk with him in the shade of his laboratory. His opening remark was characteristic: "I've done some work with the soy bean and the peanut . . . Heavens, he had done more than any other scientist, and his work with the soy bean was comparable to Edison's with the electric light. This frail, calm man had worked his way thru high school in Kansas and college in Iowa—he attended the Iowa State College of Agriculture in the 1890's. In 1939 he came to New York City to receive the Theodore Roosevelt medal for distinguished service, which was given to Carl Sandburg on the same occasion.

Mrs. Holt did a great deal of work on the book in Tuskegee, at one time living there for five months. She has done much editorial work and helped materially on the manuscripts of the autobiographies of Dr. Victor Heiser and Margaret Sanger. Her husband was the late Guy Holt, publisher and one of the founders of the John Day company and Whittlesey House. Mrs. Holt is now living in Chicago.

A Fine Book Out of the Northwest.

When a man has original writing to do he ought to keep away from the big literary markets, especially New York City. Here all the good quips and phrases travel by grapevine all over town in 24 hours and if an author is foolish enough to spill a good plot in confidence it becomes everybody's property in no time. The wise man cultivates his own vineyard. I think Ben Hur Lampman is a wise man; maybe that is why his wine is so good.

I suspect Lampman's mother had been reading a certain novel when he was born in Wisconsin a little over half a century ago. He worked in his father's print shop in North Dakota and then went west, and now he writes editorials for Portland's newspaper, the Oregonian. Whenever the spirit moves him he also writes certain homely essays about men and women who live simple lives, and about the flowers, trees, waters, and occupations that interest them. A lot of these sketches have been put together in a book called "At the End of the Car Line," which has been published not in New York but in Portland.

They Don't Make Headlines.

The old lady who lives at the end of the car line and her musings; the men and women who put in lonely days on the farms; the people who love flowers and don't always know their botanical names; the boy who flies a kite and the farmer who carries the "redolent old lamp of yesterday" into his barn—they exist in these records of Ben Hur Lampman. The things these people are about don't make the headlines and don't seem to count in this strange whirligig of violence and thunder. Or do they? Lampman's sense of awareness of the natural world is so unexpected that it seems an original talent. Yet years ago before our citified life substituted signboards for trees and brick houses for vistas of rolling hills, the best of our American writers had it. These sketches, stories, glimpses of human beings who don't belong in the slick magazines, provide a tonic to the jaded reader like myself.

But the best of this message is that one man, expressing himself as the spirit moves him when the immediate concerns of the newspaper have been satisfied, discovers once more the common touch, writes to his own public in a corner of the United States and finds himself a prophet in his own country. You'll be hearing more about the good things in "At the End of the Car Line." If you are curious to consult it, Binford & Morts of Portland, Ore., publish it [$1.50].

Gladys Schmitt Turns to Scripture.

Many novelists feel that unless their work has timely elements, it will not succeed in the present, highly competitive market. This is heresy. A novelist should write as the spirit moves him and give no thought to the market.

Witness the example of Gladys Schmitt, author of "The Gates of Aulis," one of the truly important novels of 1942. [There weren't many; you could skip all except about a dozen and still know what was going on.] "The Gates of Aulis" was, possibly, the sort of novel that a school teacher, with a classical education, might choose to write. It posed a modern psychological problem and harked back to ancient Aulis, so often a theme for writers. If you read the book you couldn't forget it.

Working on Another One.

Mrs. Schmitt, who teaches English at the University of Pittsburgh, is not going to let timeliness dominate her work. She is now busy with her next novel, which will deal with the period of David. Incrusted with many legends, this scriptural story offers a novelist great opportunities. Mrs. Schmitt sees these possibilities. "The whole canvas is so splendid," she writes her publisher, George Joel; "so colorful and so dramatic, that it sometimes leaves me gasping." She speaks of the problem of putting herself back into a day when men were simple and often childish, free of the complexity of our day. "It is like trying to be all the time as you were when you were 10 or 12 years old, in love and not knowing it, feeling God and evil and good contending all around you, everlastingly afraid of every shadow and every unknown face, finding omens in pebbles, crossing yourself at the sight of an old woman in black, thinking God loves you because somebody looks at you with warm eyes. These minds that I have to deal with are primitive. And I must be very careful not to give them motives such as I would have now . . ."

If the novelist is confident of her power to deal with her theme; if she feels assured that what she has to say will speak to other minds, then she does not need to heed the clamor of the market place. I think Gladys Schmitt's novel will be worth waiting for.

Fall of Philippines on Way to Becoming Modern Epic

Reviewed by Philo M. Buck Jr.

The time will come when the story of the sacrifice of Bataan and Corregidor will take its place beside the epic of Valley Forge or of the Alamo. But we are still too close to its pain, and its victims are friends, men and women, with whom only a few weeks ago, it seems, we lunched in the Manila hotel or at the Army and Navy club, or on whose verandas we sat at Fort Stotsenberg or Camp John Hay at Baguio. Some are named in the story.

Col. Romulo, then just Carlos Romulo, editor of the Manila Herald, once looked in at a dinner given by some American educated Filipinos to a stray American professor and his wife who were wandering among the islands. He is now Lt. Col. Romulo, on the staff of Gen. MacArthur.

This is war, and Col. Romulo was the last to leave Bataan the day it surrendered, on orders from his chief—there was a Japanese price on his head. The book is his diary, Pearl Harbor to Corregidor, and what these words mean to a Filipino, with all that America has done for the islands in these last 50 years.

Yes, in the days to come our children and grandchildren will read and be edified and put Bataan beside Valley Forge. But today—this is war and the way of Japan bent on the conquest of a world.

It is a moving story. A story of American sacrifice, but, much more, of a new country, only 50 years ago conquered by America and then trained in the ideals of freedom and democracy, given its freedom, and now valiantly before the world with its flesh and blood proclaiming its faith.

American soldier, Filipino soldier, it was a comradeship on the field of battle, in the hospital, and in the quickly made grave. "Here we were sharing a democracy of filth"; so it came to be in the tunnels of Corregidor. It is not for nothing that before the public buildings of Manila, and all of the other cities, the American flag flew side by side with the flag of the Philippines. Bataan supplied the evidence of how close was this association. Such is the theme of this book, parts of which seem written in blood.

"They were the products, as I am the product, of our Philippine public schools imbued with American idealism. I looked down on their young heads and thought we can count on our boys." . . . "This explains why out of all the conquered countries the Philippines alone sprang without question to the aid of its conqueror. Without propaganda or flag-waving it fought and is still fighting—for America."

In those dark days before the curtain fell, they were buoyed up by a hope—a hope that aid would come from over the seas. They did not know—how could they know—that incompetence, dereliction of duty, fatal complaisance at Pearl Harbor made this aid impossible. And a failure to provide security for the hundred planes in Manila had permitted an unopposed invasion. From December to April they fought the Japanese enemy, filth, hunger, disease. Hospitals openly bombed, with cynical apologies.

"We will return." The return will be difficult, but the obligation is a moral one, and inescapable.

Fiction Writer Turns to Field of Nonfiction

"THE DISCOVERY OF FREEDOM," by Rose Wilder Lane. [John Day, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Arno L. Bader.

Mrs. Lane believes in simplifying. There is only one value—Freedom. There is only one evil—Authority. For her, history is man's struggle for Freedom against Authority, and only three times have real gains been made: Once by the Jewish patriarch Abraham, who said, "man was free to do good or evil in the sight of God"; a second time by the Saracens, who "evidently got along very well for nearly a thousand years with no law," and a third time by the Americans, whose government "is not an Authority."

Mrs. Lane therefore views with alarm all economists and planned economies, all trust-busters, New Dealers, and high tariff advocates.

A great admirer of material achievements, of the way Americans have appropriated a continent and developed its riches, she finds that human energy works best when government is weak, or, "that government is best which governs least." And she takes her readers back to the stirring times of Washington, Jefferson, and Tom Paine in search of heroes, or forward to the days of Edison and Ford.

The present war she sees as Freedom's fight against a last stand defense of Authority, the New World against the Old, and, she says, "Of course Americans will win the war."

There can be no doubt of her sincerity. She writes with conviction and at times eloquently. But the book fails to convince. She is not a precise and exact thinker. Man's history and institutions she forces into an oversimplified pattern of Freedom vs. Authority, with a minimum of definition and care for the complexities of the material she is handling. What fits the pattern is grist for her mill; what does not fit is ignored.

Mrs. Lane is a successful writer of fiction, but "The Discovery of Freedom," despite its good intentions, will win her no laurels in the field of nonfiction.

BOOKS ALIVE

by Vincent Starrett

WHENEVER Lin Yutang publishes a new volume of philosophy—and all his books are philosophical—my mind goes back to a cold morning of late autumn, in 1935, when I first met that eminent Chinese man of letters in a magazine office in Shanghai. It was a melancholy morning, with a light rain falling, and I had risen at the unholy hour of 8 to keep an appointment at 11 with the distinguished author of "My Country and My People." In the course of a rambling conversation over tea, I asked him about his working habits, and, without a flicker of an eyelash he replied: "I do most of my work in bed."

Then I knew that at last I had found a leader I could follow, a philosopher whose philosophy jumped with mine. He has since converted me to Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism, and a number of other philosophies—to everything, indeed, about which he has chosen to write. I am at the moment, I think, a Taoist, thanks to "The Wisdom of China and India," his great anthology, just released by Random House.

But to get back to that morning in Shanghai: the more I heard about Dr. Lin's philosophy of work the better I liked it. A writer, Dr. Lin allowed, could capture more elusive ideas in his bed than sitting dumbly in front of a typewriter, waiting for inspiration—or opportunity—or something—to knock at the door of his mind.

Sure Cure for Insomnia.

But the position, he warned me, with a twinkle, was important. "Here," he said, "I've just written an essay on the subject." And so he had; he gave it to me to read. The best position, it appeared, was with legs slightly curled and one or both arms behind the back of the head; the head, meanwhile, reclining on soft pillows piled in such a fashion as to elevate the thinking end at an angle of about 30 degrees. I tried this remarkable system for nearly two years, during a longish residence in the orient, with the happy result that I caught up on a lot of sleep, lost in America, and got no work done whatever.

I have since renewed my acquaintance with my favorite philosopher, in other cities—in Peking, in New York, in Chicago—and I have never failed to remind him of my first rapturous acceptance of his philosophy, and he has never failed to tell me that I have it all wrong. What he meant, it seems, is that a writing man, curled comfortably on his pallet, may plan the program of the busy day that lies before him. Reaching his desk, then, say at 11 o'clock, he is primed and ready for the period of brisk dictation necessary to translate his matutinal cerebration into copy for the printer.

Unhappily, I have never learned to dictate. Either way, tho, it is a charming philosophy, and I am for it. For Dr. Lin it obviously works superbly. I can think of nobody who, in his own way, works harder. I can think of nobody now writing in English with greater urbanity and wit, more sympathetic understanding of the ironies, or with a more penetrating criticism of the curious predicament we call life.

Live and Loves of a Poet.

Are authors people? Well, there is the case of the poet Shelley, for one example. He was a wild and unusual young man, and ultimately he fell in love with a girl named Harriet, the daughter of an innkeeper, who thought his whirling talk was quite wonderful. They were married, and perhaps for a time they were happy. Then Shelley fell in love with a girl named Mary, who had an idea that his wife didn't understand him. Probably Shelley told her that, and maybe it was true; in any case, both Mary and Shelley thought that Love was a greater thing than Marriage. He explained things to Harriet, as well as he could—such things, I suppose, are always embarrassing.

"I want to be your best friend," he said. "Mary and I will go away and live together, and if you like you can join us. I think we can all be very happy together."

It wasn't that simple for Harriet. However, Shelley and Mary went to France together, and after a while Harriet committed suicide. He grieved about it, wrote some poetry about it, and married Mary. I think they were happy together. If anybody ever understood Shelley, which is doubtful, it was probably Mary.

There were other women in his life. I don't know what they meant to him; nobody seems to know. Whole books have been written about the women in his life. At least one other committed suicide, perhaps because she was in love with him, altho that isn't certain.

Enter—Two Americans.

The poet's end is one of the familiar stories of literature. He was drowned in the Mediterranean, in 1822. When his body was recovered it had been partly eaten by fish, and it was burned on a great funeral pyre by his friends, Byron and Trelawny. They knew it was Shelley's body because of two books found in the pockets—a volume of Sophocles and a volume of poems by Keats.

And what about Mary? Love was not quite thru with her. Some years later, a widow, she was living in Paris, where also at the time were two famous Americans—Washington Irving, the author of the "Sketch Book," and John Howard Payne, the homeless wanderer who wrote "Home, Sweet Home." Irving, then at the height of his fame, was a confirmed and amiable bachelor, whose boyhood sweetheart had died untimely, leaving him no wish ever to love again, but Payne, in his loneliness, fell in love with Mary Shelley. She was then only 26; she had fallen in love with Shelley at 16. And she was interested in Washington Irving. So the friendly Payne gave up his own hopes and disinterestedly tried to promote a match between them.

Nothing came of it. Irving was in love with a memory. He left the country, and that was that. Payne and Mary remained friends, and neither married. I like to wonder what might have been the effect on American literature if Mary and Irving had married, or Mary and Payne, for that matter. She wrote one book, a wild melodrama called "Frankenstein," incorrectly quoted by thousands of citizens who never heard of its author.

Wanted: One Old Copy.

Admirers of Mark Twain and George Ade, either or both, may have it in their power to do Mr. Ade and the Mark Twain Association of America, of which he is president, a favor. Search is being made for a copy of the Saturday Evening Post of 1850, 1851, or 1852, containing Mark's first contributed writing. The catch is this: the journal sought is not the familiar weekly founded by Benjamin Franklin, but an earlier Saturday Evening Post published in St. Louis—a temperance journal, say the experts—which is so rare that only two stray copies have come to light, neither of them the right one.

Reading Public Turning to Books on Technical Topics

By Arthur C. Bergholz.

The vital interest in technical books continues unabated. It permeates every activity of the nation. All branches of the army and navy have enormous, intensified training programs. Industry has such programs and, where it cannot wait for the normal schooling process or self-education, industry sets up the school right in the factory itself.

Tho it is not usual to mention agriculture in this connection, here too the whole learning program has been stepped up. The farmer is going beyond the available educational programs to self-training. He is buying eagerly in the fields of crop production, soil conservation, animal husbandry, cattle breeding—anything which will help the production and management of his farm. Morrison on "FEEDS AND FEEDING" [$5, Morrison] is as important to him as is Kent's "MECHANICAL ENGINEER'S HANDBOOK" [2 vol. $10, Wiley] to the engineer.

It is a heartening picture of people on the march to master the knowledge and skills necessary to win the war and prepare for the peace.

At the center of all this learning there is always mathematics. The introductory guides continue to sell as more and more persons become involved in the armed services and production. Discrimination is used. A deserving book such as Hogben's "MATHEMATICS FOR THE MILLION" [$3.75, Norton] sells well. One can see that the beginner finds Hogben's enthusiasm and freshness infectious. The reader welcomes the vistas he opens.

There is good evidence, at the general level, that for many the introductory stages are being passed. There is an increased call for specific texts in algebra, trigonometry, calculus, etc. The interest in calculus is notable. It is here that mathematics literally takes on movement. Palmer's "PRACTICAL CALCULUS FOR HOME STUDY" [$3, McGraw] is an excellent seller.

The mastery which is taking place is further shown in the great fields of knowledge themselves: Physics, chemistry, metallurgy, electricity, meteorology, etc. Space does not permit treatment of any of these subject matters in detail, but passing mention should be made of electronics and meteorology.

As James Stokley in his interesting book, "SCIENCE REMAKES OUR WORLD" [$3.50, Washburn], points out, this is the age of electrons. Electronics is at the focal point of our control of the processes of production and communication. Great advances are being made in radio, automatic controls, microscopic examination of materials, and sound detecting devices. These latter bear directly on television, and as soon as the war is over great advances will be made in this field. Kloeffler's "PRINCIPLES OF ELECTRONICS." [$2.50, Wiley] is welcomed as a good introductory text.

With advances in air transportation and the need of knowledge of weather in crop management and of the influence of climate upon the behavior of man, meteorology is coming into its own. A book such as "VISIBILITY UNLIMITED" by Ernst G. Vitter [$4, Morrow], sells equally well to the layman as to the individual training to be a navigator or pilot. W. J. Humphrey in his excellent book, "WAYS OF THE WEATHER" [$4, Cattell], speaks of meteorology as a cultural requirement no longer to be limited to professional interest. The whole importance of meteorology is given added emphasis by the recent designation of the University of Chicago as the center of meteorological study by the United States government.

One can only repeat that people are on the march in a vast program of learning for the tasks ahead. The repercussions are manifold. To take one for example: The whole program of using civilian instructors in the armed services means that a reservoir of trained people is being created for the time when production turns from war to production for use.

The impressive fact about the learning is that it is not undertaken as a summer job. The worker wants to be master of his skills, the executive wants to be informed so that he can manage better—and so on thru to the citizen who wants to know so that the form and function of the processes and institutions of his way of life are not foreign to him.

Ugly-Tempered Dog Trained by Master

"TWO OF A KIND," by Vereen Bell. [Little, Brown, $2.50.]

Altho this is primarily the story of an ugly-tempered black and white pointer and Duff Webster, the man who swore he would train this dog to hunt quail in championship style, one does not have to be a dog fancier to enjoy it. The author has assembled all the ingredients that make for a very gripping novel of wide appeal, including a delightful love story that is constantly highlighted by the clash between the outlaw dog named Judas and Webster, who struggles to tame it and make it a quail hunter of the first order.

Mr. Bell has tapped the colorful world of dog training and field trials to find his very human characters and a rich authentic background for his story. The result is a compelling and penetrating study of people who make a business of following one of the most thrilling yet heartbreaking businesses in the world—the development and training of brilliant setters and pointers that can win national honors in field trials. Secret Exchange.

In "Let the People Know" Norman Angell reveals for the first time a secret exchange of views between Edouard Herriot and Ramsey MacDonald soon after the last war. Angell acted as intermediary between the French and English statesmen on a matter of reciprocal guarantees, and was sworn to silence at that time. The secrecy of the conversations is no longer necessary. Viking will publish "Let the People Know" next Friday. It is a Book of the Month club selection for February.

Mexico: the Achilles Heel of N. America

"COVERING THE MEXICAN FRONT: The Battle of Europe vs. America," by Betty Kirk. [University of Oklahoma Press, $3.]

Reviewed by Kenneth C. Kaufman.

Mexico remains an enigma to North Americans, after six score years of, first assault, battery and robbery, then the big stick and economic exploitation, and finally good neighborliness and an effort to understand and play fair. For Mexico is an immense complex of racial, social, political, and religious elements, twisted, pulled and hauled by equally complex and divergent selfish interests from abroad. And it remains an enigma after a perusal of this book, altho at least some of the dark spots are illuminated and some of the tangled threads fall into pattern.

After freelancing a while in New York, Betty Kirk, a newspaper woman from Oklahoma, went to Mexico in 1936 and soon became correspondent for such widely differing publications as the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Christian Science Monitor, and the London Times. She is said to be the only North American woman correspondent the London paper has ever had.

Miss Kirk has a way about her. And she was lucky. She met and made friends with nearly all the important Mexican officials and politicians. Thanks to their influence and her own ingenuity, she has seen the inside workings of most of the important social-economic experiments Mexico has tried. Thanks to them, she has on several occasions made the gentlemen of the press unhappy by scoring noteworthy scoops. She knew about the Poza Rica concession to the Dutch Shell before anybody else suspected; she got the beat on Mexico's attitude at the Lima conference, and the William R. Davis barter contract. Thanks to pure luck, she uncovered the Nazi machinations behind the riots which had Henry A. Wallace as their target.

She is ready to go almost the whole way with the drastic measures put thru by Lázaro Cárdenas [the hero of the book], but is obviously relieved to be able to say that Avila Camacho has swung back to what she calls the "middle way." She considers Mexico the leader of the world toward revolution 30 years ago, and now its leader back toward evolution. She is much too enthusiastic in her appraisal of the success which has attended the breaking up of the huge landed estates into small farms and communal holdings. It is true that this has brought unprecedented prosperity to certain regions specializing in certain crops, but in others the Indians have proved conspicuously inept managers. She thinks the oil properties expropriations not only necessary but inevitable; but she soft-pedals the present management and production of the vitally important oil sources.

But few will be disposed to quarrel with her when she maintains that Mexico is the Achilles heel of North America; that whoever controls Mexico will have taken a long step toward control of this continent. She puts her finger squarely on the issue when she points out that Franco's Spanish Falange, acting as a stooge for Hitler and trained in Hitler methods, is our most dangerous foe on American soil. It is staffed by men and women with a definite entrée, speaking the language and united by ties of blood, which are, after all, stronger than ties made up of printer's ink and neighborly goodwill.

This is a thought provoking if not infallible book, a must item for any one who would get a clear, whole picture of the western hemisphere in this war. And Miss Kirk has a style which makes reading it a pleasure.

CHICAGO Movies SUBURBAN

........COMING TO CHICAGO

Vivien is the soprano soloist of the ensemble. Her voice is known to millions of radio listeners.

Velvet voiced Maxine, a contralto, is another soloist of the organization, made up of 30 musicians.

Spitalny Band Opens Week's Stay on Friday

Phil Spitalny's Hour of Charm all girl orchestra, widely known for its radio broadcasts, concerts, motion pictures, and recordings, will open a week's engagement at the Chicago theater next Friday.

Soloists in the unique organization include Evelyn of "magic violin" fame [also concert mistress and head arranger of the orchestra]; Maxine, velvet toned contralto, and Vivien, lovely blonde Pomona, Cal., college girl, whose bell-like soprano has a range from low F to F above high C.

The all girl orchestra, composed of 30 musicians and singers, is now in its seventh year of existence. It came about because of Spitalny's unflagging belief in the musical genius of women and its success has more than justified that belief. The group specializes in "heart appeal," unusual special arrangements and tonal precision, and also in choral singing. Its members are all versatile instrumentalists and singers, and are adept at the classics as well as symphonic swing.

Composed of graduates of leading music schools thruout the country, the orchestra has been accorded special praise by scores of musical appreciation groups, among the chief honors received being the award of merit bestowed by the woman's national radio committee.

In the last year the orchestra has performed in concert at Town Hall, New York; at various army camps and naval training stations, and took a prominent part in the commissioning ceremony of the new battleship North Carolina.

Film Stars' Stage Unit in Red Until Opening

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Ruth Hussey says she needs a course in public accounting since she took over as treasurer of the Brentwood Service players, which includes Laraine Day, Lee Bowman, Allan Jones, and Irene Hervey, they have been writing, producing, and acting in their own plays just for fun and the experience. Their current production, "Peep Show," in which she plays the lead, now is ready for an early debut. But Ruth can't balance her books. She says they show assets of $9.19 and liabilities of $47.17, but is confident the first night's proceeds will pull them out of the red.

Anna's Clock Awakens Her with Strains of Reveille

Here's Your Movie Shopping List

By Mae Tinee

Did you read "Random Harvest" by James Hilton? Then, no doubt, you're champing at the bit to see the picture version of the engrossing novel. Well, the latter is practically knocking at your door—so watch the ads.

Greer Garson and Ronald Colman, co-starred for the first time, play Paula and Charles Rainier whose love story is such a strange and potent one. The latter, as you'll remember, sustains a brain injury in the last war, and suffers from amnesia. . . . Falteringly starting out to carve a new life for himself, he meets a show girl, Paula—whom he later marries. . . . An accident brings back the man's past and, for a time, separates him from his present love. . . . Paula wins back her man and her [and his] happiness. Her methods provide the film with absorbing episode.

Prominently featured in the cast are Philip Dorn, Susan Peters, Reginald Owen, and Bramwell Fletcher. Direction was by Mervyn Le Roy, than whom there is seldom anybody whom-er.

"Flying Fortress" brings back Richard Green, the young Englishman who came over here to appear in the movies and gave up his screen career to join the British army when his country went to war. . . . He was granted a special leave of absence to star in this picture and his admirers—they are many!—will be looking forward to seeing him again.

He appears as a bomber ferry pilot, bringing Flying Fortresses from America to England. . . . Later he becomes a combat flyer. The name of his leading woman is Carla Lehmann. The production was made in England.

Stand-In Also Actor.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal. (AP).—Bob Davis, stand-in for Franchot Tone for seven years, also is a contract actor in his own right.

Make-Believe Film Wars Also Have Casualties

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Make-believe wars on film sound stages have their casualties, too. Alan Ladd, playing in "China," action thriller about the Sino-Japanese conflict, ended three days of battle scenes, suffering two lacerated fingers, a burned hand, an arm cut inflicted by a bayonet in the hands of a nervous extra player portraying a Jap, a sprained ankle, and a cold. C'est le Guerre!, Hollywood style.

Morton Downey at His Best in the Mayfair Room

Irish Tenor a Fine Showman Entertainer

By Will Davidson.

Downey Boy is back home in the Mayfair room, and never was that perennial Irishman in better voice or higher spirits. Morton's superb talents include not only mechanical perfection of voice and pianoforte, but an instinctive feel for the mood of his audience, and an intuitional knack of blending ballad and whimsy, humor and sentiment.

When the lights grow dim in the Blackstone's august dining room and a blue spot picks out Brother Downey's white piano, and when that splendid Irish tenor, spun fine as platinum thread, begins to weave the tender message of "Dearly Beloved," there is one of the most effective moments in the entertainment world. And when that same Irish voice swings into the perfectly delightful Irish Wake [the high class one] or the rousing "Same Old Shillelagh" it is, to say the least, great fun.

Morton Downey is perfectly at home in the terraced Mayfair room, with Neil Bondshu's impeccable music behind him. And you will have to go a considerable distance to find a finer showman and a better entertainer.

There are very, very many persons, of course, who will say that all you have to do is go over to the Palmer House, and listen to Hildegarde. I don't agree, but my objections are definitely a minority opinion. Hildegarde is a tremendously successful entertainer, and insofar as greatness is measured by success, she's great.

AT ARAGON

There are moments, when at her piano, in pensive mood and crossed pink spotlights, Hildegarde is indeed superb. Her treatment of "The Last Time I Saw Paris" is beautiful. "Pink Cocktail for a Blue Lady" and "I'm in Love with a Married Man" are newer numbers that give her the same scope for a fine dramatic feeling. This, I think, is the Hildegarde who sells so many recordings and who has risen to considerable prominence. I think, too, that the knowledge that there is such a Hildegarde is one thing that irritates me when she turns on her esprit de corn and coy de vivre. Hildegarde pacing the floor, shouting double entendre, archly icing an unimpressed ringsider is an artificial thing, craftily but uncomplimentarily created as a contrast to the real artist, and as a sop to the type of mentality that reacts best to the completely obvious. Successful as Hildegarde has been, I think she could be even more so with an adult approach to adult audiences.

Jumping Joe Reichman's orchestra plays fine show and dance music, and Joe's pianoforte is fun. Highlight of the supporting floor show is the good, solid, amazing tap work of the Condoes brothers. Truzzi, the famous circus juggler, I am sorry to say, is not in his element in the Empire room. And the Abbott dancers, lovely as ever, face a phychological handicap in having to make a warmed over version of their superb "Pink and Black ballet" appear fresh and new under a covering of "Fine Feathers." Their introduction to Hildegarde is a major letdown from the high quality we've learned to expect from Miss Abbott and Dick Barstow.

Joe E. Lewis established an all time record for opening night business at the Chez Paree a week ago, and I think 90 per cent of it must have been between me and the show. Approximately the other 10 per cent was at tables on the floor. As a result, I can't say a great deal in an analytical way about this new revue. Joe, of course, is a great comedian. His "Humdrum She and Monotonous Me" is in his best idiotic tradition, a type of humor that Joe masters almost to the point of monopoly.

Beautiful Bernice Parks, who, like Joe, can be seen because she works on a raised platform, has not yet reached her full stature as a café entertainer, but is well on her way. Except for a preoccupation with double entendre, which is too obvious to be suitable to her svelte appearance, she sings a good repertoire with excellent effect.

Paul Haakon is an electric dancer, but in this show, at least on opening night, he was handicapped by unbelievably inadequate music—unbelievable because it came from Lou Breese, who has always done such excellent work in playing shows. Lou, I understand, is required to use only a 10 piece band, and it is not sufficient.

Surprise of the show is pert little Betty Jane Smith, a whirling, vitamin filled tap dancer who was an instant favorite of those who could see her. The Adorables are probably as good as usual, but I'll get a periscope and make sure.

Drama Notes

"The Student Prince" and "Blossom Time," the Shubert perennials in the field of operetta, are advancing upon our city from the northwest. Identical casts, headed by Everett Marshall and Ann Pennington, will appear in both operettas. "The Student Prince" opens at the Selwyn on Feb. 7 for two weeks. "Blossom Time" will follow on Feb. 21 for two weeks. Many of the members of the company are remembered from earlier Shubert productions of these operettas. The chief performers are Frank Hornaday, Barbara Scully, Detmar Poppen, Agnes Cassidy, Nina Verala, Harry K. Morton, Zella Russell, Victor Morley, and Lorraine Bridges.

Since 66 weeks, the all-time record run in Chicago, was not long enough to exhaust public interest in "Life with Father," the most nostalgic and heart warming comedy of our generation, the play about the Day family will return Feb. 1 for an engagement of four weeks at the Erlanger theater. In addition to Percy Waram, the Father Day of the original cast, and June Walker, a new Vinnie, the company includes Violet Holliday, Anne Henderson, Kathryn Lang, Victoria Horne, Jean Martin, Camelia Campbell, Jane Barnett, George Le Soir, James Jolley, Raymond Bramley, Edsel Hughes, Bernard Carson, Michael Merritt, and Donald Hastings.

"Maid in the Ozarks," the non-critical success at the Great Northern, advertised its closing for this week-end, and then withdrew the notice. It is being held over, for how long nobody can say.

CLASSICAL RECORDINGS

A brilliant new album just arriving at the record shops is Victor's of Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, C major, played by the St. Louis Symphony orchestra under the direction of Vladimir Golschmann [M-922. Three 12 inch records]. Last of the Sibelius symphonies [the long heralded eighth never arrived] it is a superb work in one movement which has the strength of granite and the increasingly powerful focus of a mountain torrent. Mr. Golschmann's performance is exceptionally good, and the recording is full and clear. Even if it were less, it would be valuable as the one conveniently available recording of the symphony. The Koussevitzky set is to be had, if at all, only with the sizable Sibelius collection.

Bruno Walter's recorded Beethoven is bound to be of acute interest to any one who owns his album of the "Eroica." Recently he recorded the Symphony No. 8, F major, with the New York Philharmonic Symphony [Columbia M-525. Three 12 inch records] and the result is good, tho it does not match the Third Symphony in complete persuasion. The performance has breadth and exuberance, however, and most of the playing is of high caliber. You might want to compare it with Toscanini's album, played with fiery clarity, and with better horns in the trio. —C. C.

Paul Muni Hopes to Do Stage Play on Emile Zola

Paul Muni now has the idea of doing one movie and one Broadway play each season. For his next play he thinks he would like to portray Emile Zola, whom he has already impersonated in the films. He does not know of any play about Zola, but hopes that Elmer Rice or Robert Sherwood might be interested in writing one. There are many facets to Zola's life, Muni says, which were not touched upon in the film.

50,000 Teachers Needed for School Year of 1943-44

Two N. U. Men Offer Plan to Ease Shortage

By the Rev. John Evans.

C. S. Marsh, vice president of the American council on education, Washington, D. C., has announced that 50,000 teachers will be needed to keep schoolhouses open across the country for the school year of 1943-'44. But the teacher shortage is only one obstacle that must be overcome if the little red schoolhouse at the crossroad is going to stay open.

The problems of secondary education impinge directly upon the continuance of American democracy, educators agree, and the little red schoolhouse is admitted to be one of the more important agencies for perpetuating American ideals. The school building itself is in need of physical repair as well as searching for a teacher. Then there is the transportation situation which holds back the teacher nearly as much as the low salary the local school board can offer.

For example, the teacher last year got $864 for her work while a stenographer who is not even a high school graduate qualified for a $1,440 job. But the district cannot compete with higher paid office work, so the teacher will not be back this fall. In the next district they paid the teacher $75 a month, but she got a war industry job at $75 a week. Now she is gone. The man teacher in another school was taken in the draft, and the school is empty.

These cases are multiplied all over the country.

Only one concrete plan to offset the situation has yet appeared. It was announced by Professors Frank S. Endicott and F. C. Rosecrance of the school of education at Northwestern university. The plan calls for the immediate registration of all former teachers who could requalify with three months of intensive training. Special summer sessions should be set up, the Northwestern men explain, for teacher education.

According to their plan, funds for financial assistance would be provided the teachers on some plan similar to that employed by the National Youth administration to insure the needed supply of teachers and the fullest utilization of training opportunities. The plan calls for direct federal support to those school districts unable to keep or employ teachers because of inadequate resources with which to pay satisfactory salaries.

The University of Michigan has announced a 12 month course in petroleum geology designed to fit women for field work in the discovery programs of American oil companies. The program, set up at the request of several leading oil companies, was described as covering the equivalent academic work in geology formerly done in four and a half years. Between 20 and 30 women will be admitted in the new program, with the exact number depending on how many women the oil companies promise to employ. Men classified 4F in the draft and who are physically able to do field work also will be admitted.

A coöperative program has been announced between James Millikin university, Decatur, and high schools of the Decatur area which will admit to the college a number of qualified high school students who have completed three and a half years work. Designed primarily to allow young men to complete as much college work as possible before draft induction, the plan also includes young women. Decatur high school will give diplomas to Millikin students under the three and a half year plan after they have completed one semester of college work.

War Bond Symphony Concert Expected to Bring in More Than Million

By Cousin Eve.

The symphony concert to sell war bonds has gone so fast that the woman's committee, headed by Mrs. Walter R. Kirk, is breathless fro mthe speed of it. While little old Manhattan raised $38,000 at a similar benefit, Chicago's concert is going to net well over a million in bonds. Seats and boxes are free to war bond buyers for this extraordinary event, which will be held on Jan. 27 in Orchestra hall. Chicago's own symphony orchestra will be heard, and the two great artists, Nathan Milstein and Gregor Piatigorski, will play Brahms' Concerto Grosso as their contribution.

Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, who disposed of the boxes long since, Mrs. Leo Cummings in charge of seats, and Mrs. W. B. Wolf, Mrs. Donald McPherson, and Mrs. Howard Fenton are Mrs. Kirk's active committee.

Meanwhile, after the lapse of two decades New Yorkers have seized upon Tableaux Vivants again, and some of the younger women in society took over a theater on Jan. 12 to give a spectacle called "Women Can Take It."

The show had an all-woman cast and portrayed famous women in history. Thus Diane Du Bois was Marie Antoinette, Elizabeth van Leer was Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and Clare Luce, the actress, was Charlotte Corday. In tableaux of the countries Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt was Egypt, Diane Eristavi was a lovely blonde pilgrim maiden, and Mrs. Clarence Mackay appeared in a covered wagon scene. China was represented by plump Mrs. Lin Yu-tang, wife of the author, and her two daughters, and a Clara Barton act was played by the wives of officers in the service, including Mrs. Hugh A. Drum.

It all sounds quite cute and was very money making. New Yorkers pay and pay to see the fashionable beauties and never seem to tire of it.

Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick held a reception at the Casino Friday afternoon in honor of Dr. Anthony Juraz, eminent Polish surgeon. It was an animated and delightful party, even if Dr. Jurasz had been worsted by our celebrated winter climate and was ill in bed, for the vice minister of foreign affairs of Poland, lately Polish ambassador to the Hague, Waclaw Babinski, acted as a substitute guest of honor and stood in the receiving line with the hostess. Mrs. McCormick wore a short red frock, there were red roses on the tea table which was laid in the Fountain room, and you heard the soft blurry sounds of Polish in various groups among the guests.

Chauncey McCormick has been greatly honored by Poland in the past, as he was an associate of Herbert Hoover in carrying food to the starving Poles in 1919, and in the present he heads Polish relief in the United States, and has formed a distinguished Chicago committee to benefit the Paderewski hospital for Poles in Edinburgh, Scotland. The benefit will be a movie, "Hitler's Children," Wednesday night at the Palace theater.

Pouring tea at the party were various charming and pretty women of our society, among them Mrs. James Hopkins, Mrs. Richard T. Crane, Mrs. Byron Harvey, Mrs. Potter Palmer, and Mrs. Charles

Mrs. Donald F. Bowey Jr., who is president of the Margaret Etter creche, snapped in the silver room of the Woman's Athletic club. The opening performance of Gertrude Lawrence in "Lady in the Dark" on Tuesday night at the Civic Opera house will benefit the creche, as will a supper party following at the Pump room.

Dried Beans, Served in Many Ways, Called Good Substitute for Meat

One Versatile Cook Even Puts Them in Pies

By Mary Meade.

[Copyright: 1943: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Lucky for us, there's no shortage of dried beans! Dried beans are a good, staple protein food, especially valuable to us now that we can't have all the meat we want. Beans are a fine source of thiamin [vitamin B1], the vitamin so likely to be lacking in the average citizen's diet. This is another reason for serving beans frequently.

Boston baked beans and bean soups aren't the only ways to fix these legumes. I know about one cook who even makes bean pies! She mashes cooked soy beans or navy beans, sweetens and spices them, ending up with a delicacy which tastes something like pumpkin pie. I'm not suggesting bean pies, because I think most of us can use the beans we have to better advantage, and pies take too much valuable fat in the making. Pie crust is an extravagance in wartime, one which is only rarely justified.

Bean Chowder.
[Serves five or six.]

1 cup dry beans
1½ quarts water
1 cup diced carrots
1 cup tomatoes
½ cup shredded green pepper
2 onions, chopped
2 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
¼ teaspoon pepper

Wash beans and simmer several hours, until tender. It is not necessary to soak them overnight, altho soaking will shorten the cooking time. Add vegetables and salt. Cook until vegetables are tender. Add flour mixed with a little cold milk. Add remaining milk and pepper. Simmer 15 minutes longer and serve. Other vegetables may be added or substituted for some of the ones in the recipe. Celery and cabbage are two likely prospects.

Scalloped Lima Beans.
[Serves four.]

1½ cups dried lima beans
1 quart water
1 small onion, chopped
4 tablespoons drippings or other fat
4 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 cup evaporated milk
¾ cup water from beans
1 cup grated American cheese
¼ cup dry bread crumbs

Simmer beans in salted water until tender. [Soak overnight or not, as you prefer, but use soaking water to cook. Add more, if necessary.] Drain beans and save cooking water. Cook onion in fat until soft and add flour, salt, and pepper. Stir in evaporated milk gradually, stirring constantly. Add water from beans. Cook to a smooth sauce. Add cheese. Put alternate layers of cooked beans and cheese sauce in greased casserole, sprinkle with crumbs and bake at 375 degrees for 20 to 30 minutes.

Boston Baked Beans.
[Serves six.]

2 cups dried navy beans
¼ pound salt pork
½ cup molasses
1 teaspoon dry mustard
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 onion

Wash beans and pour boiling water over them. Soak 3 hours, cover and simmer in same water until tender, adding more water if necessary. Drain, reserving cooking water. Turn beans into casserole or bean pot. Scrape pork rind until white, score top and bury in beans with rind exposed. [If you can't get salt pork, use a bacon rind or piece of ham fat and rind to flavor beans. Even this meat may be omitted if you prefer "vegetarian beans."] Bury the onion in the beans. Mix molasses, mustard, salt, pepper, and 1½ cups cooking water and pour over beans. Bake slowly, at 300 degrees for 4 hours, uncovering during last hour. If necessary, add more cooking water from beans.

Baked beans seem to taste best when they're accompanied by steamed brown bread. Cornmeal and flours are plentiful now, so baking and steaming breads at home is a good idea.

Steamed Brown Bread.
[Two cans or molds.]

1 cup sifted enriched flour
2 teaspoons soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup cornmeal
1 cup whole wheat flour
¾ cup molasses
2 cups sour milk or buttermilk
1 cup raisins [optional]

Sift flour, soda, and salt and mix with cornmeal and whole wheat flour. Mix molasses and milk. Add to dry ingredients and mix. Add raisins. Fill greased molds two-thirds full, cover tightly and steam for 2 hours.

Honey Bean Pot.
[Serves six.]

2 cups pinto beans
2 onions, sliced
¼ cup bacon drippings
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ cup honey
4 apples, sliced

Simmer beans until tender, drain and put into a pot with onions, fat, seasonings, and honey. Add enough of the drained liquid to cover and bake in a slow oven, 300 degrees, for 3 hours or longer. Slice apples over beans and bake uncovered until apples are soft.

Next week dried beans are the "victory food special."

For simple and delicious dessert, stew fresh quartered pears or apples in a sirup made of ½ cup honey and 1¼ cups water. Remove the cooked fruit to sherbet glasses or dessert dishes when tender, and cook the sirup until thick. Pour it over the fruit and chill before serving. Lemon juice or nutmeg may be used to accent the sirup. Raisins or dates may be cooked with the fruit, too.

Many Interests Ease the Long Convalescence for Your Child

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

The following letter made me jam my thinking cap down a little harder on my head. The result, not as good as I would like it to be, makes me wish that some of you who read this column would give the young writer of the letter, thru me, the benefit of your own ideas, or those of the experience of other young persons and children, who have had this very same situation to cope with. The letter is brief and to the point.

"Dear Mrs. Bevans:

"I thought you might give me some suggestions. I'm 15 years old and have been in bed for just about 14 months. Naturally, I get rather impatient and restless. My mother cannot be with me all the time as she, like all mothers, has other things to do. My friends, since school has started, do not have time to visit. Only on Sundays do I have an opportunity to see them. My brothers are both away.

"I'm getting weary of reading and do not have patience for knitting. I'm afraid I'm getting to be a trial to my mother as to what to do. I have a radio which occupies some time. I wonder if you could give me something to do to get interested in. There are things that could be done, but I cannot seem to get interested. Could you please give me some suggestions? I have many correspondents."

I replied by letter with these suggestions, all I had time to write without delaying a reply:

"Naturally, you get tired of reading, and, since it is a good way to spend your time for part of the day, it is too bad to get fed up with it; I hope you won't if you have other occupations. I will make just a few suggestions today and try to write you again.

"I believe one of the most satisfactory things to do when you are laid up is to use your hands. Yet, many things which people suggest are tiring physically and require special skills. Now these skills you might acquire after a while, but, for the immediate present, it occurs to me that you might like to make presents for birthdays and other interesting articles of use or beauty. I am going to inclose some suggestions and directions about such articles. From among these I believe you will find many things that you will enjoy making.

"If you have small sisters or little friends young enough to enjoy dolls you might experiment with something we used to enjoy very much, that is, making a shoe box into a doll house for them.

"You speak of not enjoying knitting, and I am afraid I am one of those people who sympathizes with you. But crocheting is another story. Perhaps you mother could teach you the simple crochet stitches, such as are use in making blocks for an afghan, or the "afghan stitch," used to crochet long strips of different colored wools which are then sewed together. I had excellent results with this stitch.

"Making a scrap book about some subject in which you are interested is really fascinating. If you are interested in flowers, houses, movie stars, or furniture, you could cut pictures of these objects from various magazines, and paste them in a portfolio.

"What talents have you? Do you paint or draw? You could develop these talents by yourself.

"You speak of girls coming to see you. Do you think it would be interesting to arrange tournaments of certain games, and keep your records from week to week? It might be done somewhat as they do tennis tournaments where they have trials and then the finals. Perhaps, if you talked this over with the girls, they might have other and better ideas to offer.

"Have you been well enough to do any of your school work? If that is not too much of a strain, I should think it would be interesting to do the work and turn it in to your teacher to be marked.

"I hope some of these will 'ring the bell,' and if I think of anything else I will write you again."

Chicago—[To the Home Owners' Editor]: What sort of mixture can we use for cracks around the rim of a built-in bathtub? Tub and wall tile seem to be drawing away from each other. M. N.

Answer: Inquire at paint or hardware store for a waterproof cement that will adhere to enamel as well as to tile, or use a tile cement. You also can buy a coat of glaze and apply this to cement after it has dried to make it entirely waterproof.

Chicago—[To the Home Owners' Editor]: Is galvanized iron wire screening rustproof? K. M.

Answer: No. It should be protected with varnish or screen enamel.

Answer: You might spatter it with ivory, scarlet, bright yellow, and powder blue.

Chicago.—[To the Home Owners' Editor.]—Hair line cracks are appearing at the upper edges of mortar joints in our brick walls. How can we stop possible leakage?—George F.

Answer: There are waterproofing colorless liquids available for just this purpose.

Choose Right Powder Base and Stick To It

By Eleanor Nangle

The foundation that gives added charm to your best friend's complexion may not work out for you, but when you've found the one that suits the tint and texture of your skin, that holds your makeup well, and, best of all, gives a youthful undertone of radiance and velvetiness, you've really found something!

You might have to experiment. If you've no previous experience with powder bases, your best bet will be to buy tiny sizes of the new ones you want to try. It's most important to follow directions, and to remember, above all, that a little is usually far better than too much.

One little known base we like immensely. It's the kind that provides a light, but beautifully flattering veil for the skin. Altho it's a cream that's gossamer thin in texture, it does conceal some blemishes, the light kind, and it gives the illusion of finer texture to the skin itself.

This is a light paste that must be applied sparingly. A dot on the nose, the forehead, and both cheeks should be enough to film the whole face, and it will spread smoothly and evenly. Use it on the neck, too.

When you've spread each dot in a widening circle that meets with the next dot—and you should do this quickly and lightly—apply your cream rouge and lots of powder. Then dust the surplus powder off with a brush or a down puff. If you're true to dry rouge, powder first.

This takes away that dry, taut look which the too-dry skin has. It gives it a luminous, faintly moist quality that is attractively softening in its effect. The makeup won't look masklike, but it will have a freshness and underglow that it would otherwise lack.

You have a choice of three shades in this, shades carefully chosen to harmonize with the average skin tints. You'll find it easier than many others to apply, and it is NOT drying.

Bond Concert to Raise More Than a Million

B. Goodspeed. Also young Mrs. Brooks McCormick, the lovely young daughter-in-law of the family.

Others there were Mrs. Clive Runnells, Mrs. Howard Linn, Mrs. Donald McPherson, Col. and Mrs. George T. Langhorne, Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Cummings, Mrs. Emmons Blaine, Robert Hall McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Bradley, Mrs. Henry Hooper, Mrs. Jacob Baur, Dr. B. J. Mix, Joseph Staniewicz, and Count Grasczynski, a new member of the consular staff in Chicago. A stirring moment of the afternoon was the toast in Polish proposed by Chauncey McCormick to our armies and those of our allies. A deeply tanned officer of the marines was present at the party, who had brought a message from Lt. Deering McCormick on duty in the South Pacific to his family.

Chicago's chapter of American Friends of Poland, of which Col. Langhorne is chairman, is about to have a get-together in honor of Michael Kwapiszewski, counselor of the Polish embassy in Washington, D. C., who is coming this way soon.

The counselor, who is one of the most charming men ever, speaks perfect English, is married to an American, and is as amusing and brilliant as can be. I knew him some years ago in Warsaw, where he was delegated by the Polish foreign office to accompany us on various social and official occasions. His long, rather complicated name was a problem, until one took time off and learned it by heart—and then it had no longer any terror.

The party for Kwapisczewski will take the form of a tea or a luncheon on his return from a visit to John Cudahy in Milwaukee, where he will address the American Friends of Poland of Wisconsin at some large entertainment.

The Arts club had one of the nicest parties in its history last Sunday night, preceded by a view of the galleries, which have a new exhibition of pictures. There was a dinner served by candle light, at which the members and guests were younger and more modish than of late. A few of the more glamorous wore veils strewn with sparkles rippling over their hair and shoulders à l'espagnole. The smartest women seemed to wear black.

Mme. Claude Alphand of Paris gave the program to an audience which filled the hall to the doors and beyond an audience that rose to the occasion and was gay and debonair as was the singer, altho she was subtle about it.

The little stage was candle lit and the artist was robed in white dusted with gold lamé, a sheath that clung, yet draped Greekwise at the knee and neck. Her long slim arms and hands were bare, and for a while it seemed that she did her singing with those lovely hands, for of voice in the old fashioned concert sense she had none. Yet at long last there were two quite poignant voices, the high, sweet soprano of a child and the deep, mournful alto of a torch artist. With her hands, there was never twice the same gesture—in her songs such a wide diversity, that one never wearied or wished the whole thing over. After the artist gave two songs standing, she hoisted herself to the piano and sang with a guitar. One of the hits was an imitation of Yvonne Printemps—the least interesting a song in "American" which nobody understood. Her accompanist, M. Revil, is also the composer of her most captivating songs; three of them are marvelous—"Sur les Quais du Vieux-Paris," "Les Frites," and "Les Moules Marinieres."

Mme. Alphand is really an up-to-the-hour Yvette Guilbert and more of a diseuse than anything else. But so great is her art that the audience sat spellbound, altho many couldn't have understood the implication of her songs, which were typical Parisian ditties, quite naughty and risqué.

The evening made all the Francophiles homesick for Paris. Where else does one see such an artist—so much out of so little?

To continue in a French vein, the Alliance Française opened its doors Thursday afternoon with a French fashion show by Mme. Marguerite, in its fine library in the Fine Arts building.

Mrs. John Collier, the pretty and accomplished new president of the alliance who follows Mrs. James H. Winston in office, presided most attractively at the party, where again was a full house. The library, with its book lined walls, its tapestries, its little stage with two quilted white satin screens which showed the delicate spring frocks of the models, the growing plants, the lovely music by a well known pianist, all made for an hour very Parisian and charming. Mrs. Brooks McCormick headed a bevy of girls who modeled, including Mary Adams and some of this year's debs.

Mrs. Laird Bell and Mrs. Walter Brewster poured tea later on, Mrs. Moise Dreyfus rustled silver cake and sandwich plates about among the convives, and among past presidents who were in the audience were Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, Mrs. Ralph James, and Mrs. J. H. Winston. Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, Mrs. Ralph Winston, Mrs. Spencer-Brown, Mrs. Chauncey Borland, Mrs. Freeman Hinkley, Robert Hall McCormick, Mrs. Albert Wolf, and Mme. Eugene Raymondeaud were a few of the many who attended. The black lace short evening frock of Mme. Raymondeaud was one of the most chic and artistic of the year. It takes a Parisian!

Washington handled the question of allied relief more astutely than we did in Chicago with Freedom Fair. The 12 allied nations had their bazars during December, but they were given separately in the various embassies and legations, excepting Greece and Jugo-Slavia, which combined. Each sale continued for three days and was carried on by Washington women and wives of the secretaries. Tea was served in the dining room at these sales at 50 cents a head and the wife of the minister or ambassador was sure to be present during the afternoon. As there is much interest in these foreign establishments, there was a great rush of patrons to all of the 12 bazars and they all made money.

It was a clever idea, because there were no overhead expenses, and the objects on sale were donated. Mrs. Joseph Davies gave some gorgeous ornaments to Mme. Litvinov for the Russian booth and the British embassy also had warm friends who helped them out with handsome gifts. These sales were not simultaneous, but scattered along over a period. Unfortunately at the time that the Poles were having their benefit, Ambassador and Mme. Czechanowski got word of the death in action of their 19 year old son, a flyer in the British royal air forces. With remarkable fortitude they insisted that the event go on as planned, and showed themselves courteously and with great stoicism among their guests. Mme. Czechanowski was born in England, daughter of one of the great coal barons, and her Polish husband was, strangely enough, a son of a coal magnate of Poland.

There will shortly be a new and handsome bride in Washington in the person of Mlle. Sophie Kutusov, daughter of Count Sergei Kutusov and great-granddaughter of the old field marshal, Prince Kutusov, who defeated Napoleon in Russia. She is marrying an attractive Dane, Kai Grandchamp Winklehom, whom she met not long ago at a party in New York, given by Mrs. Harrison Williams. Mr. Winklehom is on the war production board, is good looking, and plus 40. Sophie is slim and dark, a handsome, distinguished looking girl who writes of her joy at being a prospective housewife with jellies and linen on her shelves. She was married once before at 18 to a young prince of the Troubetzkoi family, but the romance foundered very soon after, ending in divorce. Mlle. Kutusov lived in Chicago for 18 months but went east in November.

An amusing story about another Dane, our own Ove Vett, comes from Washington, where he was delayed long weeks on his South American project. He couldn't very well leave because all his valuable papers, letters of introduction, etc., had been stolen and had to be replaced before he could wing away.

In the interim of waiting he was asked to lunch one Sunday at Evelyn McLean's house in Georgetown. As he was unknown to most of the convives, the rumor went round that Ove, whose manner is superb, was a prince of the Danish royal house, traveling incog. Buzzie Hewes, who was present, spread the news at his own dinner that night that he had met the "royal" Dane, and in time the rumor caught up with Mr. Vett, who was much embarrassed but probably greatly pleased at being taken for a royalty.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Little of Evanston have sent out invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Olivia, and Oden Meeker, Lawrence Meeker's stepson. The ceremony is set for Jan. 30 at 5 o'clock in the First Methodist Episcopal church, Evanston; which holds at the most 250 people. The Lawrence Meekers' circle is large and the Littles' is even larger with "Tout Evanston" to invite. Mrs. Little is a sister of Hugh Wilson, our last ambassador to Germany, a most popular and able diplomat, who is expected to return to Evanston for his niece's wedding.

War Not Likely to Force Miami from Business

The ban on pleasure driving is the biggest bolt out of the blue skies of

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

Miami and Miami Beach so far this season, but now that the first shock has passed, winter visitors are accepting the edict philosophically and adjusting their plans once again to meet the demands of a nation at war.

Gasoline or no gasoline, tires or no tires, racing or no racing, resort Florida will not be forced out of business until the sun quits shining, as one by one, the "extra attractions" are erased from the picture, resorters realize more and more it is really the sunshine they want most, and they seem willing to give up everything but that.

The results of the ban cannot be minimized, but what first seemed a death blow now proves to be only a staggering blow, with the victim, "the season," rising to its feet. Hardest to part with, of course, is racing at Hialeah Park. It is Florida at its finest, and a big part of the picture here, yet old-timers recall that the good old days in Miami did not even include racing. Tropical Park was almost thru its first meeting, with poor attendance, due to gasoline rationing, and probably was not too sorry to close its gates. This track hopes to reopen for its spring meeting, when the fuel and gasoline situation may be less critical. Few mourned the temporarying passing of the Hollywood and Biscayne dog tracks, for they didn't need four in this area, in view of the times. Two, the Miami Beach and West Flagler Kennel clubs, are still operating, as they are accessible by public buses. Jai-Alai continues, too, for those who never let the sun go down without placing a bet.

By this time most people are reconciled to a season without horse racing, but at first there were many propositions as to how to open Hialeah Park without violating the ban against pleasure driving.

Many reasoned that if racing had to be abandoned merely because patrons could not get to the track, why not have the races anyway, and let the fans place their legalized, parimutuel bets at a huge downtown office. The mayor of Miami suggested, along this line, that bettors be allowed to watch the horses run by television. Another suggested that movies could be taken and shown later to fans who insisted on seeing the race. Some even suggested that fans assemble every afternoon in the Orange Bowl stadium and watch race results on a huge board.

But all plans, some sensible, and some ridiculous, have foundered, and people are discovering that not all they liked about Hialeah Park was straight, place, and show. They liked the tropical beauty of the place, the color, the excitement, the race itself, and they have little heart for any plan, but the actual opening of the track.

One theory is that Florida could be reclassified as a gulf state, thus removing it from the eastern area, where the ban is in effect. The east coast of Florida is the most glamorous, most publicized, but the fact remains that nearly two-thirds of the water frontage of the state is on the Gulf of Mexico, not, as snap judgment dictates, on the Atlantic ocean. Political leaders feel that there would be no shortage of gasoline in the east if Florida's proposals for wooden barge oil carriers had been heeded months ago, and for this reason they are a little bitter that Florida now has to suffer from the shortage.

And so, when any one is invited to a party in Miami or Miami Beach nowadays, the question is not "What shall I wear?," but "How near is it to a bus?" Every means of transportation is being used, buses, bicycles, roller skates, horses, and horse drawn vehicles, including hay wagons and buggies.

Fortunately for members of the Bath club, a bus line goes right by the door. The Indian Creek club is not as fortunate, but many of its members live on the island and can walk to the club; others walk from the bus line. Golfers will have to use buses, too, for "if it's fun, it's out" is the simple rule of the ban. One prominent resident made a great point of riding his bicycle to a golf course, but sent his car and chauffeur with his clubs. Buses are many times overloaded, of course, and even then cannot accommodate all their new customers, and probably the funniest sight of the week was a whole orchestra, carrying their instruments, walking down Flagler street to get to work. Charter boat fishing may be scratched off the list, too, but not fishing from bridges, which doubtless will continue as always, as no one ever has heeded, anyway, the signs "No fishing from bridge."

No better sign that there is room for both civilians and the military here is given than that on Biscayne boulevard. Thinning ranks of automobiles long have shared the wide thorofare, precariously, with naval forces. Now wooden barricades line a parkway in the center, with two way traffic for the men, and on the outer edges, lanes for cars.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark C. Honeywell of Wabash, Ind., arrived a few days ago to spend part of the winter in their Pine Tree drive home. Mrs. Honeywell, who is equally well known in music and in Indiana newspaper circles, will be piano soloist at the University of Miami Symphony concert today. Mr. Honeywell is president of the Committee of One Hundred of Miami Beach, which will present Henry C. Wolfe as guest speaker on Tuesday at the weekly forum. Mr. Wolfe's subject will be "Searchlight on the Pacific."

When Mr. and Mrs. John M. Volkhardt of Chicago give a buffet supper on Wednesday at their Miami Beach home, they will have few worries about food rationing. From their victory garden they can serve tomatoes, radishes, lettuce, and spinach, and from their trees, papayas and bananas. And they can supplement all this with some of the 1,300 containers of fruits, vegetables, and meats that Mrs. Volkhardt preserved last summer at their country place at Lake Beulah, Wis.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert W. Wigglesworth of Kenilworth have as their guest Mrs. Wigglesworth's sister, Miss Eileen McCarthy of Omaha. Mr. Wigglesworth's son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wigglesworth, are visiting from Marblehead, Mass.

Mrs. Arthur Abraham of Chicago is spending the winter with her sister, Mrs. R. C. Gardner, and Mr. Gardner, Miami city commissioner. Mrs. Kenneth B. Buchanan and Mrs. Albert L. Grinnell are visiting the latter's son, Lt. William Grinnell, and the younger Mrs. Grinnell, at their home in West avenue. Mr. Buchanan and the elder Mr. Grinnell have returned to Wilmette.

D. A. R. Head to Be Guest of Local Chapter

By Irene Steyskal.

Old Father Dearborn, with his ever appreciative eye for the ladies, outdid himself in his favorite rôle as host last spring when the Daughters of the American Revolution moved their 51st continental congress here from Washington, and he won many admirers. Of them all, none was more impressed with the cordial spirit of his city nor has been more warm in her praise of it than Mrs. William H. Pouch, the president general of the society and a New Yorker.

Mrs. William H. Pouch. [Tribune Photo.]

Her interest in Chicago and its D. A. R. members brings Mrs. Pouch back this week on a visit in answer to an invitation from Chicago chapter. Because it is seldom that an individual chapter has an opportunity to entertain the president general, the Chicago daughters are planning to make a gala event, within the bounds prescribed by wartime conditions, of the meeting Thursday afternoon in Curtiss hall of the Fine Arts building at which Mrs. Pouch will be the special guest and speaker.

The meeting also will bring Mrs. Otto H. Christ, Illinois state regent from Danville, as a special guest; a large contingent of national officers whose homes are in Illinois, state officers, and regents of the 30 D. A. R. chapters in the 4th division of the state society, which comprises the Chicago area.

Presiding at the meeting will be Mrs. Arthur J. O'Neill, Chicago chapter regent. Special music for the occasion will be provided by Leonard J. Huber, baritone, and Doriss Briggs, harpist. After the meeting, there will be a reception and tea in compliment to Mrs. Pouch and Mrs. Christ.

That evening Mrs. J. De Forest Richards, former regent of Chicago chapter, will give a dinner at the University club for Mrs. Pouch and Mrs. Christ, which will be attended by national officers from Illinois, the state officers, and board members of Chicago chapter. Mrs. Richards is a member of the advisory committee to the national D. A. R.

Several other patriotic organizations are meeting here this week, among them the Illinois department of the National Society of the United Daughters of 1812. Gathering at 1 o'clock Tuesday in the English room at Marshall Field's, with Mrs. Charles E. Shearman presiding, the members are to hear an address by Mrs. Vinton Earl Sisson, former librarian general of the D. A. R., who is known to patriotic societies thruout the country for her studies on subversive activities in the United States. Mrs. Sisson's subject will be "After the War, What?"

This afternoon four Illinois department units—Gen. Edward S. Solomon, Gen. Abel Davis, Gov. Henry Horner, and Sergt. Sam Dreben—of the ladies' auxiliary of the Jewish War Veterans are giving a tea at the Morrison hotel in compliment to Mrs. Rae K. Schoenberg, national auxiliary president, scheduled to arrive this morning from Bridgeport, Conn., for a four day visit. While in Chicago, Mrs. Schoenberg will visit the Service Men's centers, U. S. O. clubrooms, and Hines hospital.

Tomorrow night Mrs. Schoenberg will officiate at installation ceremonies for newly elected officers of the Gov. Henry Horner auxiliary, and Tuesday night she will induct the officers and new members of Gen. Edward S. Solomon unit.

The Illinois Congress of Parents and Teachers will have its interest focused Thursday at the American Medical association's auditorium, 535 North Dearborn street, where its annual health and summer roundup conference will be in session thruout the day. In charge of the meeting are Mrs. Elmer Geissler of Joliet, health chairman of the congress, and Mrs. Leonard Graf of Elmhurst, who heads the summer roundup committee.

The program is to be a panel discussion by physicians and health authorities of the general subject, "Building Health for Tomorrow." Dr. W. W. Bauer, director of health education for the American Medical association, will be the discussion leader.

Others of the panel will be Dr. H. W. Elghammer, pediatrician; Dr. Elizabeth Ball, member of the state department of public health; A. H. Pritzlaff, director of physical education in the Chicago public schools, and Dr. L. H. Dodds, director of health education for the Illinois Dental society.

The conference is directed primarily to officers, health chairmen and members of parent-teacher associations, but will be open to all persons interested in procuring health information.

Health is the dominant program theme for an all-day meeting of the Cook County Federation of Women's Clubs, which Mrs. Elmer B. Jones, the president, will convene at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning in federation headquarters in the Fine Arts building. Dr. Beatrice E. Tucker, director of the Chicago Maternity center, will address the assembly at the afternoon session, and present the center's film, "Fight for Life." In the morning the women will hear Dr. Helen M. Kostka on "Preservation of Health, Individual Responsibility." Another morning speaker will be Miss Margaret March-Mount of the forestry service, whose talk carries the title, "Wood Wings for War." Dr. V. A. Latham, public health chairman of the federation, has arranged the schedule.

At the Chicago Woman's club and the Woman's City Club of Chicago, the programs this week are directed to current problems both of local and wider significance. Philip Cummings, sociologist and lecturer on world events, will speak at the Chicago Woman's club Wednesday afternoon on "World Conditions from the American Viewpoint." That morning the education and philosophy department will present Dr. Robert J. Havighurst of the University of Chicago. Dr. Havighurst, a member of the committee on human development at the university, will discuss the question, "What Is a Firm Foundation for Children in a Chaotic World?"

The Havighurst lecture is the second in a series arranged by Mrs. William J. Bogan's committee on new trends in education.

Jewish Service Club to Begin War Bond Drive

The outstanding news item this week from the Jewish service organizations in the Chicago area is the announcement of the successful completion of a $100,000 war bond drive by one group and the opening of a similar drive by another group.

Miss Bobbe Arnst.

Marking the official opening of a $100,000 bond drive by the Dorothy Kahn Club for Crippled Children will be a rally with guest stars from radio and opera at 2 o'clock tomorrow at the Standard club. Miss Bobbe Arnst, mistress of ceremonies, will introduce Miss Jane Freeman, operatic singer, and Pat Butram, star of the WLS barn dance. When the $100,000 goal has been met, the club will be honored by having a pursuit plane named for it. Mrs. A. M. Graff is chairman of the program committee.

At a closing rally and luncheon, the Jewish Big Sisters will gather at 12:30 o'clock Tuesday to celebrate the completion of their $100,000 war bond sale. Representatives from the army, navy, and marine corps will be there to address the group. The drive was directed by Mrs. Leslie B. Levin and Mrs. Bert Novy. Mrs. Samuel S. Hollender heads Jewish Big Sisters.

Culminating an annual fund raising drive, the Willing Workers Woman's club will give a dinner this evening in the Covenant club, at which Mrs. I. J. Wagner will preside. The club is an organization contributing to the maintenance of the Winfield sanatorium, and the group also provides milk, and eggs, and clothing for needy patients upon their discharge from the institution. Mrs. H. P. Hartenstein served as general chairman for the drive.

The Esther Maltz aid, a group affiliated with Rest Haven, will hold an open meeting for members and their friends today in the Somerset hotel, Argyle avenue and Sheridan road. There will be cards, entertainment, and refreshments.

Newly elected officers will be installed by the Junior auxiliary of the B. M. Z. Woman's club at an open meeting for members and friends at 2:30 o'clock today in the Standard club.

Mrs. William Stanley, 1500 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, holds a full-time volunteer job with the Office of Civilian Defense. For this portrait by Dora, Mrs. Stanley wears a two-piece navy rayon crepe dress from our Women's Dress Shop. This is the third in a series of eleven portraits of Chicago women in the war, drawn for us by Dora.

SO PROUDLY WE HAIL...

the Chicago woman in Civilian Defense

When your family sits down to dinner this afternoon, to a dinner you've carefully planned, juggling scarce meats and vegetables and the needs of a balanced diet into a delectable whole, you've done a good day's work in Civilian Defense.

Because her job as Director of Consumer Information Service for the Chicago Metropolitan Area of the Office of Civilian Defense is symbolic of yours, we have selected Mrs. William Stanley to represent you. She works all day and many evenings at her volunteer job, in the same quiet fashion you do, just getting things done. Under her direction, consumer information is gathered from all government agencies and from many privately endowed institutions and passed on to you. Her office arranges for classes in your neighborhood where you may learn how to take care of electrical appliances and how to conserve gas heat; may have clarified the confusing details of rent ceilings, price ceilings, inflation, point rationing. All the things you want to know, need to know, to help win the war.

Yours not the glory of a badge or a uniform—yours only the coffee pot empty after dinner, the neatly flattened tin cans, the cooking fat saved for explosives. Marshall Field & Company salutes you, for it is these hundreds of small things you do every day that mark the road to Victory.

Annual Hoosier Salon Opened in Indianapolis

By Eleanor Jewett.

For 17 years the Hoosier Salon was the most important exhibition Chicago knew in January. Last year the exhibit was held in Indianapolis and a small number of the paintings, including the prize pictures, were brought to the Marshall Field galleries in February. The Daughters of Indiana, one of the most active and interested groups which supported the salon, purchased last year, as has been their custom, a painting for their permanent collection. The collection hangs in an Oak Park school.

This year the Hoosier Salon will not come to Chicago at all and the Daughters of Indiana will not purchase a painting; they plan instead to give a prize of $100 for the best water color in the show. The Hoosier Salon opened last night in Indianapolis with a reception to which many loyal Illinois Hoosiers went, and a part of the salon will be on exhibit in East Chicago in February. Those who follow the salon will be delighted to hear that Warner Williams was awarded an important prize for a brilliant "Head Study" and that Anne West carried off the first prize in painting with her animated and gay "Beach Scene." Charles M. West Jr., so my informant reports, won another imposing prize with a painting entitled "The Narrows." Prizes totaling over $3,000 were awarded.

Mrs. C. B. King, who for many years conducted the affairs of the Hoosier Salon and Hoosier Gallery with enthusiasm and vigor, is still in California. Her interest in the salon has not lessened, tho her active participation in its affairs is a thing of the past. Mrs. King was instrumental in securing many of the prizes the salon has been able to offer, in interesting the Catholic church in the exhibits and in bringing business, clubs, individuals, and groups into sympathetic support of the salon and all it stands for.

A new gallery with the same ideals and standards as those maintained by the Hoosier Salon opened about a year ago at Syracuse, Ind.—the Wawasee Art Gallery. It is managed by F. E. Marsh. Last June Mrs. Edwin N. Johnson of the All Illinois Society of Fine Arts, Rudolph F. Ingerle, well known Chicago painter, and John H. Seaman juried a first exhibition which proved a great success. This February another jury will try and give the gallery as popular and fine a second show. Oils, pastels, water colors, and etchings will be hung. Edithe Jane Cassady and Winnifred Pleimling may be two of the jurors. Artists from all over are invited to send their work. The entry fee is $5. For details address F. E. Marsh, Wawasee Art Gallery, Syracuse, Ind.

The influence of those 17 years [illegible] Indiana in the shape of the [illegible] Salon loomed large on Chi[illegible] [illegible]rt horizon must still be with [illegible] another Indiana group is making news this week. Twelve well [illegible] artists composing the Porter [illegible] Art association are holding their first Chicago exhibit in the Club Woman's bureau, Mandel Brothers, to Jan. 31. Frank V. Dudley, often a winner at the Hoosier Salon, shows several beautiful paintings. V. M. S. Hannell and Hazel Hannell, his wife, offer delightful paintings and Mrs. Hannell has an intriguing group of ceramics as well. One member of the group, Jack Gondring, is now with the United States army air corps in Australia. Among the other artists are Edna Agar, Noah S. Amstutz, Paul W. Ashby, and Stanley Bielecky.

Two exhibitions are on view at the Arts club, Wrigley Tower. Jean Helion and Morris Graves divide the walls. Graves is an American surrealist; Helion, a French abstractionist. If you like curious compositions done more than a little in the Japanese manner, you may enjoy the creations with animals and birds which Graves lavishly bestows upon one; Helion follows Leger, adequately. This is primarily a show for lovers of modernist painting; necessarily it is limited, but inasmuch as this type of art is being perpetrated today it is as well to see it. Just too chi-chi might sum it up—unless you fall for the mice, birds, snakes, swans, mathematics and spaces provided. If you do, this is your show.

Several notes have come in calling attention to the fact that the beautiful Boutet de Monvel "Joan of Arc" has been put in storage at the Art Institute, due to lack of wall space. The painting is said to have cost $30,000. It has long been an inspiration to the boys and girls of Chicago. We think we remember keenly when we were taken to see it, at the age of 12 or 14. Boutet de Monvel's son has been in Chicago and painted a number of charming portraits. His work is lovely, but he is not the painter his father was. "Joan of Arc" could be an inspiration to the present generation.

The Art Institute offers an exhibition in Gallery 53, the "Art in War" gallery, of "Camouflage for Civilian Defense." The designer is Carlos Dyer. The exhibit was assembled by the Museum of Modern Art, New York City, collaborating with Pratt institute and the United States army engineers at Fort Belvoir, Virginia. The exhibit will continue thru February 14 and is worth seeing. Several points which it raises are most interesting.

When Chicago Was Young Presents "From An Old Trunk"

By Herma Clark

It is not often today that one finds old letters and papers of purely social interest which have been kept in family archives. Since attics have passed out of existence, there is little room for such possessions. Still less often are cards of invitation kept. Yet invitations and responses reveal so much of the manners and mode of life of a preceding generation that they are both valuable and fascinating.

In a trunk which had belonged to the late Mrs. Robert S. McCormick [Katherine Medill] has recently been found a real treasure trove of old invitations dating back to the '70s Famous names appear on the invitations, many of which are addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Medill, while others had been sent to the Misses Medill, his daughters.

The accompanying reproduction is an interesting and important invitation. Philip H. Sheridan was at the height of his popularity in 1873, and what maiden heart would not palpitate at the thought of having the Hero of Five Forks as her dancing partner? [Tho, it is said, his performance as a waltzer was distinguished more for vigor than for grace!]

Lieutenant General Sheridan and the Officers of his Staff request the pleasure of your company at Standard Hall
Michigan Avenue
on Wednesday Evening: January eighth 1873. at Nine o'clock
R.S.V.P.

"Standard Hall, Michigan avenue" was doubtless a room in the building erected by the Standard club in 1870, at the corner of Michigan avenue and 13th street. It escaped destruction in 1871 because the great fire which destroyed Chicago's business section and the residence section of the near north side extended only as far as Congress street on Michigan avenue.

Gen. Sheridan used the Standard club as headquarters immediately after the fire, and it was given over to the relief work of the city for about a year, but in the autumn of 1872, it was reoccupied by the club members, a considerable sum being spent on repairing and refurnishing it.

The invitations sent out by the general and his staff are beautifully engraved, the stationery firm supplying them being Halliday and Roberts, 372 Wabash avenue. A card enclosed gives a list of the officers participating in the festivity. Among them are two names of interest. First may be mentioned Gen. D. H. Rucker, later to be father-in-law of Philip H. Sheridan, who, after remaining a bachelor until middle life, married Irene Rucker in June, 1875, while he was stationed in Chicago. The other name to be noted is that of the Civil war hero's brother, Lt. Col. M. V. [Mike] Sheridan.

A sidelight is thrown on the hours for meals observed in the '70s by a hand written note to Mrs. Medill from Mrs. A. L. Chetlain, who "would be very happy to have Mr. Medill and yourself take tea with us on Thursday evening at half-past six o'clock, to meet Mr. Washburne and a dozen other friends."

The guest of honor, "Mr. Washburne," was no doubt Elihu B. Washburne, who had represented the United States in France during the Franco-Prussian war and had returned to spend the remainder of his life in Chicago. He built the great red brick house at the north east corner of Dearborn and Maple streets, now used as a club for business women. The Chetlains lived at 291 Oak street. Gen. Chetlain had been abroad at the same time as had Mr. Washburne, for he had acted as consul general in Brussels during the early '70s.

The two men were old friends, as both had come from Galena, and both were friends and supporters of President Grant. Mrs. Arthur H. Chetlain, a daughter-in-law of the hostess at this festivity, lives at 7414 Sheridan road, and many descendants of Elihu B. Washburne are Chicago residents.

No date is given for the tea to which the Medills were bidden, in this yellowed old invitation, but the handwriting and turn of phrase is that of the '70s. Note that "tea" was at half-past six. "Dinner" in the '70s was usually a mid-day meal. Most people called the evening repast "supper," in pioneer style, but if you wished to be elegant, you said "tea."

Food served at such a function might be cold pressed chicken, escalloped oysters, creamed potatoes, cabbage salad with sour cream dressing; raised biscuits, jam [several kinds]; with ice cream and cake for dessert. Coffee, nuts, and "confectionery" wound up the meal, after which the gentlemen retired to the smoking room and the ladies to the drawing room. Eventually the host said to the masculine circle: "Shall we join the ladies?" Cigars then were discarded and an hour was spent in the drawing room, where the ladies had been discussing fancy work and how hard it was to get a good "hired girl" under $3 a week. With the advent of the men folks, the tide of conversation turned to real estate [always Chicago small talk], politics and business.

Home by 9:30. Good old days for the business man who must rise betimes next morning!

THE TRIBUNE TRAVELERS' GUIDE

Old Mexico's Churches Are Travel Magnet

By Joseph Garrett.

Only one foreign warm vacationland within reach remains to beckon to American travelers this winter. Obviously, that surviving haven is Mexico, our ally and colorful new-old world good neighbor to the south.

It still is comparatively easy to get to Mexico. There are no shipping problems, no enemy subs to dodge. The only bogies are gasoline rationing and more crowded conditions in other fields of transportation.

Mexico still welcomes us and lures us to her friendly climate. No doubt, her transportation facilities still are ample to accommodate at least a modest percentage of the heretofore highly lucrative, American winter tourist influx.

Perhaps many of those able to cross the Rio Grande will prefer more subdued sightseeing to the usual round of travel gayety. For the titanic struggle in which we are engulfed touches all of us gravely and some of us heavily.

Therefore some travelers may desire a meditative appreciation in the artistic wonders of old church, cathedral, and monastery relics, for the land of ancient races, fiestas, tortillas, bull fights, and sombreros is a land also of spires, domes, and fortresslike cloisters, many of them listed on the usual run of tourist itineraries, many not.

There seems no end to these two, three, and four century old sanctuaries. Some of their contours and artistries re-create an atmosphere of medieval Europe. Many are silent and deserted, save for mute, kneeling worshipers and awed or curious visitors. Some, perched on hilltops, are architectural jewels in distant vistas. Many have amazing facades, priceless interiors, rare carvings, scrolls, and paintings well worth seeing.

There is scarcely one ecclesiastical structure, pretentious or modest, intact or decaying, that does not, in some way, stir feelings and contemplation.

Cholula, once mighty Toltec city 80 miles southeast of Mexico City, claims to have 350 churches. This number, the accuracy of which arouses skepticism, may include some of the numerous churches in Puebla, 10 miles away.

However, one of Cholula's church prizes is the Royal Chapel, whose 64 pillars form seven naves and 47 arches to support 63 domes.

Puebla itself is called a city of churches, because of their multiplicity. Its massive cathedral, consecrated in 1649, is reputed to be one of the handsomest in this hemisphere. Here, likewise, may be visited the long-hidden, subterranean convent of Santa Monica, discovered by the authorities in 1934.

Somewhat crumbling from age is the monastery in Tzintzuntzan, a Tarascan pueblo on Lake Patzcuaro, 280 miles west of Mexico City. In its church is a much revered painting of the Entombment, attributed by the natives to Titian, and by others to El Greco.

Two chief items of interest repose in Guanajuato, a day's ride northwest from the capital. One is La Valenciana, a striking church edifice with interior carvings of intricate delicacy; secondly, catacombs whose well preserved mummies giving a lasting impression because of fantastic positions and facial contortions in a weird setting.

Not far from Guanajuato is Celaya. Its stately Church of Our Lady of Carmen warrants a visit. Its architect, sculptor, and painter of its fine paintings and murals was Francisco Eduardo Tresguerras, Mexico's first great artistic genius. He completed the great Celaya church in 1807.

One fortress sanctuary relic in Mexico is the 400 year old church and monastery of San Augustine Acolman, near Mexico City. Augustinian monks built it in 1530-'60. Monochrome frescoes around the main altar represent popes and church dignataries.

Churubusco, another suburb, has a majestic Franciscan monastery aptly termed by one writer, "a worn gem of colonial architecture." Also erected 400 years ago, it is the subject of many an inspired artist's paint brush.

An hour's ride out of the capital will bring one to the strangely named "Desert of the Lions," in the pine forest of the Toluca mountains. In a secluded spot are the crumbling ruins of a church and monastery erected by barefoot Carmelite monks in 1606. One can see the ghastly dungeons where the flagellants chained themselves.

In Mexico City itself is the famous prodigious cathedral, in Oaxaca, the much praised Santo Domingo church, in Tepozotlan the magnificent churrigueresque church—ad infinitum.

Off the tourist-beaten track one might visit San Miguel de Allenda, a town near Dolores Hidalgo in the state of Guanajuato. Here may be viewed a fine Gothic type of cathedral. It was designed, planned, and constructed by Zeferino Gutinerrez, a native who never had even an hour's schooling.

Mexico is a good neighbor and our ally. Perhaps we ought to lend-lease her some appreciative tourists.

GIANT CACTUS

The saguaro cactus is a familiar sight in the Tucson, Ariz. region.

Arabian Horse Ranch Is Attracting Sightseers

The University of California's Arabian horse ranch, near Pomona, devoted to the grazing of thorobreds, has become a new objective in sightseeing. The ranch covers more than 750 acres and of special interest are the cultivated gardens and the arcaded stables which resemble the palace of an Arab. While the ranch may be taken over, at a later date, by the United States as a remount station, it is believed that, because of the popularity of the horse shows, the exhibitions will continue thru the winter.

Service Men Get New View of California

By Dorothy Johnson.

Southern California, once the mecca only of tourists and vacationers who saw most of the scenery from eye level, now is being seen from a bird's eye view by army pilots and thru the peep slit of tanks by men in the armored divisions. In peace time, tourists came by thousands to see the purple lupine and golden poppy, but the sight which thrilled them was only a peek compared to the aviators' view of solid color filling a valley between mountain bastions.

Armies on the move go thru cactus forests, skirt sand dunes and pastel colored mountains, and dip thru orange groves heavy with fruit and the perfume of blossoms. The groves [at first the boys called them "orchards"] interest service men.

Unusual fruit is a treat to Uncle Sam's warriors-in-training. They eat every kind of citrus—orange, lemon, tangerine, and kumquat. They have been introduced to the avocado, the guava, and the cherimoya, and many a young soldier eagerly charges the first olive grove he sees, only to learn, wry faced, that one doesn't eat olives fresh, because they're bitter that way.

When on furlough, service men visit the attractions which once were the prerogative only of peace time tourists. Many head for Los Angeles and Hollywood. In Los Angeles, the All-Year Club of Southern California takes them over, if they so desire, furnishing tickets to radio broadcasts, sightseeing maps, and printed sightseeing directions.

The Pacific ocean is a constant lure, especially to boys who have lived their lives in inland United States. They pick starfish off the rocks, gather garlands of seaweed, and fish for bass, cirbina, halibut, and other catches abounding in the offshore waters.

Catalina Island is seeing a new kind of visitor, young men stationed there for maritime training. They live in the palatial hotels, board ships at the wharf where excursion steamers used to dock, and cruise thru the flying fish waters and over the submarine gardens, where tourists again will gape thru glass bottomed boats when peace is won.

Surprising enough in ordinary times are the submarine gardens, which line much of southern California's coast line, with emphasis on Santa Catalina Island. Today men in diving helmets walk thru the gardens, picking clumps of sea fern from the underwater growths. This is agar sea fern, essential war material.

TIPS TO TOURISTS

What's your travel problem? Address queries regarding where to go, how to get there, costs, and accommodations to the Travelers' Guide, Chicago Tribune, inclosing stamped, self-addressed envelope.

What is the current condition of the Pan-American highway? The project interests me, from the point of view of post-war travel.—J. M.

Both the main route and the roads off the Pan-American highway are still under construction, and the work goes steadily forward. Scenic roads of South America, totaling more than 2,600 miles off the main route, are nearing completion and soon are to join the great north and south thorofare as tourist avenues with new resort centers after the war. The main route, which will traverse the extremes of latitude and altitude, is a stretch of 13,794 miles from Fairbanks, Alaska, to Buenos Aires, Argentina, and will total 15,494 miles by means of the Rio de Janeiro extension. From the Colombia-Peru border the road is finished thru Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires, and north to Rio. Among the extension roads soon to be finished is the link from Palmira, Colombia, to Buenaventura on the Pacific.

Already functioning are the secondary roads around Maracaibo and Puerto Cabello in Venezuela. Another nearly completed link is the 350 mile highway from Lima, Peru, across the Andes to Tingo Maria and Pucalpa.

I have heard New Orleans, La., referred to as "the Crescent City." Why? Also, would you mention some places of interest to visit in that city? —R. E.

New Orleans is situated approximately 80 miles from the mouth of the Mississippi river, on a graceful bend of the stream, hence its nickname, "the Crescent City." Some points of interest to visitors are as follows: Canal street, separating newer New Orleans from old New Orleans, or the French quarter; Royal street in the French quarter, with its quaint courtyards, shops, and world famous restaurants; the Pontalba buildings, America's first apartments; the Spanish arsenal, Napoleon House, Old Mint, Old Absinthe House, St. Louis cathedral, the Cabildo [early government house, now a museum], and the French market.

MEXICO
• We shall be perfectly frank. If it is inimical to the best interests of America's war effort, then Mexico would not want you to visit her this winter. But if you are one of the fortunate "furlough" group, or if overwork or health demands rest and change, then a cordial, warm-hearted welcome awaits you here.
• Your ally south of the Rio Grande is keeping "open house" all through winter and into spring. Hemispheric solidarity suggests this courtesy. As your host we shall do everything in our power to make your visit restful and delightful—and you may be sure that Mexico's sunny, rejuvenating "winter" will bring a quick return to vigor.
No passport is necessary, and there is no gas rationing in Mexico. Moreover, your dollar buys more. But make your reservations early so we may send you complete information on when to go and how.

Phoenix Bus Is Amusing but Unpredictable

PHOENIX, ARIZ. It is reminiscent of the horse car era, and just as unpredictable. It runs when the spirit moves, and the route varies according to the friends the driver has en route, for he needs must stop and chat with his friends and have a cup of coffee.

Of course, that takes time, which he attempts to make up, and usually does, while the passengers say a prayer and clutch their hats. Dr. Sylvio Sciaretta, who is a frequent patron of the bus, has been named "mayor" of the bus while R. Miles Warner and Lt. Edward Flynn are his committee. Just how much authority is vested in the mayor and his committee when it comes to schedule and route, is a question, but anyhow it is an experience.

Judge and Mrs. John O'Connell were hosts at a dinner party Saturday night at Camelback Inn. Included in the party were the Philip Harringtons and the Benjamin Coopers. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Crawford and Mr. and Mrs. William Blum from Rockford make a busy foursome at the inn and are ardent devotees of the "pitch and putt" course. Their recent dinner guests were the Boyd Pixleys, who have a home for the winter at Chandler.

Mr. and Mrs. William May of St. Charles have just arrived at the inn and plan to stay thruout the month.

Sun lazying always has been the most popular outdoor sport in the "Valley of the Sun" [as the chamber of commerce tries to get us to call the Salt river valley] and this year more so than ever. With the difficulties of transportation and limited sight seeing, sun lazying has really become a vocation for the easterner vacationing in Phoenix. It seems incredible that just 14 years ago the patio of the Westward Ho hotel was just another bare and ugly city block. Today its luxuriant growth and flower bordered paths look as if the garden had been planted centuries ago, another evidence of the workings of the sun in Arizona. And today the comfortable chairs are filled with guests visiting, playing bridge, or just "siesta-ing."

The George Milnors of Wilmette are ardent players on the putting green which is at the far end of the patio. The Richard Hydes are spending the winter at El Charro and have succumbed most enthusiastically to the lure of riding over the desert every day. Mrs. Hyde plans to stay until April, but business calls Mr. Hyde back to Chicago. However, he hopes to return shortly with his plane, which he has given to the government for ferry command. The ideal weather conditions make the Phoenix area a flyers' paradise.

The ramada at the pool at Jokake Inn is the favorite spot to while away sunny, lazy days. It's such an easy way to acquire a beautiful sun tan, judging from Mrs. William Burry Jr., and Mrs. Helen Pauling Donnelly, who are spending some time at the inn. Mrs. Donnelly arrived on the 15th.

Maybe the Warren Wrights are the owners of the famous race horse "Whirlaway" but they are discovering that the old cow ponies of the west aren't so bad and that the desert trails, from the Arizona Biltmore, where they are spending the month, are most intriguing.

Sitting around the open fire in Mr. and Mrs. Lew Davis' desert home might be termed a study in the adventure in successful living. It's a small house, way out in Paradise valley, with Mummy mountain and Squaw peak rising abruptly in back of it, while before it stretches the mesquite covered desert to the distant McDowell mountains. The Davises own about a section of land which they hope to cultivate some day when there is water in Paradise valley. Meanwhile they have horses, a cat, a dog, and a few chickens and the most beautiful cacti garden to be found anywhere in the state. Their house is hardly more than one large room, with a galley for a kitchen, and a studio which must be the envy of all artists, not only for its workability but from the inspiring view from its north windows.

The house shows the influence of their neighbor, some 15 miles away, Frank Lloyd Wright, and while it has the artistic charm of Mr. Wright's it also has the practicalness of Painter Lew Davis and his sculptress wife, who disabuse all notions that artists are a disorderly clan and a bit on the unwashed side.

Doubletree Ranch, it is called. The house is built of rough redwood with one large room which serves as living room, dining room, bedroom, and so on. The living and sleeping part of the room are separated by an enormous desk which juts out from a side wall.

The kitchen is separated from the one room by a high bar, which is perfect for sliding dishes from the stove to the drop leaf table in the dining end of the living room. There is an abundance of cupboards, so that the special herb or seasoning desired at the moment won't be back out of sight and arm's reach. Then there's a wonderful dressing room divided into space for working clothes, levis, boots, and the like, and a built-in wardrobe which would do justice to a sophisticated apartment.

Palm Beach Is Taking Driving Ban in Stride

By Helen Van Hoy Smith.

PALM BEACH, FLA. Resorters have certainly started walking. Many use the buses. Taxis dart here and there at all hours of the day and night, their dimmed-out lights making twin pin points of light after dark in the blacked-out streets. Bicycles, always popular in Palm Beach, are in even greater demand now. Rental agencies can scarcely supply the demand, altho many own their own bicycles. The chief of police has ordered all bicycles to carry proper lights at night.

The ban has closed one of the two movie houses in Palm Beach, and the other has put bicycle racks in front. They are always filled. Fanny Ward has been using a full-sized tricycle.

The Everglades club has announced that no news of club activities containing names will be forthcoming from the club.

"We can't even tell you who attended the tombola luncheon or who wins the backgammon tournaments," said a voice sadly on the telephone. [We'll try to bear up.]

Chicagoans continue to arrive in Palm Beach. Mr. and Mrs. Ross J. Beatty of Highland Park have arrived and black-out curtains have been duly hung at Casa Degna, their handsome ocean front villa.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Miller have opened their attractive house on Australian avenue. They motored from Chicago, and made the trip in "four and three-quarters" days at the low rate of speed required by the government.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Lewis and young sons, Edward and Philip, are at Villa Phil-Ed, their home on Royal Palm Way.

Mr. and Mrs. Dewitt Davis III. of Chicago have taken an Everglades Club maisonette. Mrs. Charles Strout Davis is arriving this week-end to open her lake front villa.

• • • •

Mrs. Frank Vernon Skiff, who has as her guest the Rev. George De Haven Franklin of Daytona Beach, entertained on Tuesday with a luncheon at the Bath and Tennis club. Mr. and Mrs. James W. Carnahan of Chicago have as their guest Mrs. Carnahan's sister, Mrs. Benjamin Hardin of Owensboro, Ky.

To say that Palm Beachers were somewhat disappointed at the closing of the Miami race tracks is an understatement. They are hoping for a spring racing season, and those who had planned to attend the opening of Hialeah late Wednesday have taken a rain check.

Members of the Palm Beach unit of the American Red Cross motor corps celebrated the completion of their first year of service with a tea at the Everglades club on Thursday. This motor corps, captained by Mrs. Pauline Burke Carr of West Palm Beach, has been of invaluable assistance. Here are some of the services it has rendered: Helping in the operation of a first aid station and emergency ambulance service for the Civil Air patrol; driving mobile kitchens for Volunteers for Victory; transportation of hospital and recreation supplies to various military bases in the vicinity; driving crippled children to and from clinics and hospitals; driving convalescents for outings; driving military personnel on missions; and transporting supplies for the Red Cross.

Another event of Thursday was the pre-view and tea which opened the members' exhibition at the Society of the Four Arts.

• • •

Mrs. James P. Donahue has opened Ceilito Lindo, her ocean front estate. This estate is at least two miles south of the center of Palm Beach, but is conveniently near the Bath and Tennis club. The house is a huge Spanish type structure with a tower room, and was designed by the late Addison Mizner. It is famous for its dining room which has four walls of mirrors from floor to ceiling. Lofty arched windows look out on a patio and lawn of tropic beauty.

Four Clubs Schedule Fitness Hikes Today

In conjunction with the physical fitness program of the OCD, four clubs have scheduled hikes for today. Members of the North Shore Hiking club will leave from Winnetka Village hall at 9:40 o'clock in the morning for a six mile walk thru Pottawatomie woods along the Des Plaines river near the Lake county line. At the same time, the Prairie club group will leave Union station via Burlington for a nine mile hike on the Salt creek trail. At 10 o'clock a party from the Outing club will leave 20 East Randolph street via bus for a six mile hike on the southern slope of the Des Plaines valley. Another hiking group, from the Outdoor Physical Fitness club, will leave from the Field museum at 10 o'clock for a six mile walk along the lake shore.

University Spanish Club Schedules Open Meeting

Prof. S. N. Trevino, member of the University of Chicago faculty, will give an illustrated lecture on Spanish phonetics at an open meeting of the Northwestern university Spanish club at 8 o'clock Wednesday night. A program of Spanish music played by Miss Joan Becker and Miss Mary Louise Boehm, students of the Northwestern university school of music, will include Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" and Albeniz' "Triana."

Central Eleanor Club to Hear Travel Talk

Mrs. Bernice Durkee will repeat her illustrated talk, "Hop, Skip and Jump Through Mexico," at a tea for associate members of the Central Eleanor club at 2 o'clock tomorrow in the assembly hall, 16 North Wabash avenue. The annual artists' concert this year featuring Maurine Parzybok, contralto, and Marian Hall, pianist, will take place at 8 o'clock Friday night.

Here Are 20 Questions for Every Woman to Think About

By Doris Blake.

What kind of woman will your service man return to? It's a question for every woman, wife, or sweetheart to ponder. How to maintain your sweetheart rating with him, and how to develop into the type of woman who promises real marriage success are vital problems.

Here are 20 questions to ask yourself. They are meant to serve as a helpful guide for achieving a better YOU. Answer conscientiously each question with either "Yes" or "No."

1. Do you get up each morning with the determination that you're going to make the most of each hour of the day?

2. Are you ready, with stanch courage, for whatever war time trials may arise?

3. Do you stifle the urge to complain?

4. Do you help others to be brave by your own good cheer and courage?

5. Have you tried to stop worrying, realizing that worry does no good and is bound to take its toll in your looks, personality, and health?

6. Are you determined you won't be a "war jitters" victim?

7. Are you sincerely trying to understand and get along better with his family?

8. Have you determined not feel sorry for yourself, realizing there are others in the same boat?

9. Even tho he is away, are you as particular about your appearance at home and at business as tho he were still with you?

10. When you write to him, do you refrain from a recital of your troubles and express no fears for his safety?

11. In your letters, do you tell him the homey things with which he's familiar, so that he will feel close to you and home, and feel he still belongs?

12. Are you interested in acquiring skill or improving your skill in any of the following?

[b] Home economics. [Inventing new dishes from leftovers, learning to cook more appetizingly, learning better nutrition values, learning how to buy more wisely, learning better home management.]

[c] Home nursing.

[d] First aid. [Always useful.]

[e] Child care and feeding. [What every woman should know.]

[f] Budgeting. [Every woman should know how to make each penny count.]

[g] Repairing. [So you'll be able to make your own minor home repairs.]

13. Are you learning to be a better neighbor and more thoughtful friend?

14. Are you learning to be more appreciative of things you formerly took for granted?

15. Have you made an effort to form a social club of your friends whose husbands and sweethearts are in the service, realizing that such a club would be a good way for all of you to help each other?

16. Are you keeping up with your man by doing your share on the home front, so that when he comes home you will have been a real part of the war, too, and will not have created a wide gulf of varied interests?

17. Do you realize every day of his life in the service he's experiencing educational advantages which may be alienating factors unless you, too, keep on growing mentally?

18. Are you learning to think less selfishly of yourself, and more of others?

19. In spite of your fears for what may happen, are you going ahead, regardless, saving your money and planning for the time when you may be together again, firm in the belief that, with courage, you can meet whatever the future holds in store?

20. Are you saving by buying war bonds and stamps.

For Knitters and Crocheters

1237

By Ellen Bruce

The most popular item of feminine apparel these days is the good old-fashioned hug-me-tight of the crocheted variety. It is crocheted in gay, bright colors and worn over a wool dress with all the style aplomb of an Eton or bolero jacket. Being sleeveless, it is not bulky, and offers the comfort necessitated by the all-out economic effort for fuel conservation. The garment is made with a large crochet hook.

For instructions in crocheting the hug-me-tight, No. 1237, send 10 cents in stamps or coin, plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost, to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

The old-fashioned bed sock is assuming a new rôle these days as a sport sock worn with ski or skating outfits. When it is knitted of lightweight vicuna, it is a bedsock. When it is knitted of cashmere or stocking wool, it is for outdoor wear.

For instructions in knitting the bed or ski sock, No. 385, sent 10 cents in stamps or coin, plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost, to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Fashions as I See Them

By Judith Cass

The few occasions that bring forth evening clothes find the "cover up" type of dress in highest fashion. Mrs. Robert M. Hutchins' dinner dress at a recent theater opening was a clever "grown-up" edition of the dresses her schoolgirl daughters might wear. Her slim black velvet gown had long, full sleeves of white crêpe and a soft turned back collar of the white material. Her white "dickey" was fastened by jeweled studs and the whole effect was one of a youthful jumper worn with a white blouse. Tied to her hair was her customary pair of little bows, one on each side of her forehead. Mrs. Frank Bering, instead of pinning her corsage of green orchids conventionally at one shoulder, chose to convert it into a stunning headdress one evening recently. Her dark tresses were covered with a black crêpe snood winking with jet sequins, and a spray of the exotic green blossoms trailed down one side, framing her pretty face. Mrs. George Arthur Kelly sometimes tops her smoke gray evening gown with a tomato red wool mandarin coat, knee length and scrolled around the edges in gold embroidery. Another tone of red is the geranium colored panel which slashes the front of Mrs. Byron S. Harvey Jr.'s dinner gown from neck line to hem.

Mrs. Robert M. Hutchins. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Mrs. W. English Walling II. combines black and red in a handsome dinner gown. The dress is of figure fitting black crêpe, pencil slim, and topping it is a deep yoke of deep red embroidered in gold. Mrs. Charles H. Bess appeared recently in a stunning gown of black cut on distinguished lines and brightened with a gold kid belt. Miss Mary Ballard danced with her fiancé, John H. Hobart, in a pretty frock of white silk, printed all over in a zigzag design of pale and dark blue lines.

A vision in scarlet wool at a Christmas time afternoon party was Mrs. Lefens Porter, whose street length dress was cut on simple lines and buttoned down the front of the bodice. To the frock was pinned one of Mrs. Porter's Christmas presents, a service flag pin with one star—for Lt. Porter, U. S. N. R.—mounted in a stylized circle of two tones of gold, an unusually good looking piece. Mrs. Denison Dunning's newest party hat is of crimson breast feathers, a forward tilting little bonnet with a tiny brim made in three overlapping parts. Mrs. Arthur A. Burrows Jr. created a stir of admiration when she arrived at a cocktail party with a white jersey bonnet atop her head. Snuggled in the front, held by a twist of the turban, was a little bunch of violets, and making the whole a patriotic picture was a twist of scarlet jersey on the other side of the center twist of white.

Dancing at a Winnetka party was Miss Jean Butler, the Gerald Butlers' debutante daughter. Her vivid scarlet frock dress was semi-full skirted, had three-quarter length sleeves, and was stunning with her fair complexion and long blonde bob. A perfect foil in both looks and dress was her dark haired house guest from the east, Miss Cookie Robinson, whose full bob was of shining black and whose two piece dancing dress consisted of a muted blue faille skirt and a black velvet top with short sleeves. Mrs. Stewart Boal often wears flaming red in a charming long sleeved gown of filmy chiffon whose only decoration is a gold nail studded belt. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Philip W. Moore Jr., joined in a Virginia reel wearing a two toned crêpe dress of soft yellow and sage with interesting gathers thru the bodice and short sleeves. Mrs. George W. Ryerson's sweeping pale blue brocade dress was particularly effective during waltzes, which gave the skirt an opportunity to swing out gracefully. Also in blue at the same party, a heavenly tone of powder blue, were Mrs. Laird Bell and the senior Mrs. Moore, whose dress was of lace.

Lady of the House

Along the Home Front.

"With several million women already in industry and the services and a lot more to go, the 'home front' begins to look like a thin, wavering line of grandmothers back on the job."

With that pronouncement Aunt Ella picked up the towel embroidered "Saturday" and began wiping the best cups and saucers.

Not so thin and not so wavering, Aunt Ella. I find there are still quite a lot of women bending over cook stoves, wash tubs, sewing machines; wiping runny noses, buttoning small garments, feeding, and tucking in tired youngsters—doing all the unglamorous, unsung tasks along the home line, sans uniforms, sans press notices, often alone.

They're developing new skills, adapting themselves to the shifting environments and conditions that shape the ever changing job of home-making. And they are singing—and praying—on the job. I hear them. They share with me in person, thru many letters, greetings, little pictures, small gifts, gracious invitations.

One young mother writes, "I'm going to make my small son the best American I can, and I won't let any one else do that job." Another young woman—just now "jack-of-all-trades in a garage"—finds life "rich and deep where it is humble and quiet."

An older one makes a merry song about the eternal task of dishwashing. Another gathers about her the children of mothers who must work outside their homes. . . . Shoulder to shoulder they share and coöperate.

And, Aunt Ella, I know several stores that were sold out on aprons before Christmas. Yes, the home line, "anchors to windward" for our boys, is going to hold, strong and steady.

Goodnight, Soldier Son.

Each mother at evening
Is thinking of her son out "there;"
One on her knees
Is commending him to God's care.
One presses to her heart
A small glove he used to wear.
One listens to a radio,
Sitting in his favorite chair.

One makes a trip
To the attic, to caress a broken toy.
One pats a curly dog,
Lonely companion of her boy.
One turns the pages
Of a magazine, by him so newly read.
One smoothes the pillow
Of her boy's unoccupied bed.

One gazes on a picture
Which is her guiding light.
All over the world
Each mother is saying goodnight
In her own way
To a soldier son far away.

ANNE T. KOSTELLIC.

Showman.

Snowman, you're such a swanky guy.
You sport white clothes, coal black your eye:
You smoke your Meerschaum with such glee
And stand so straight, so tall so free.
I wonder how you really like
Your stovepipe hat once worn by Mike.
I hope the gang, when running by,
Will miss you when their snowballs fly.
Snowman, you were such fun to make,
To roll all up and then to take
Each part—your legs, your trunk, your arms,
And guard them from all passing harms.
And now I shudder when I think
The sun will glow and you will shrink
And very slowly trickle down
To our old swimming hole, west of town.

Today is the birthday of Benjamin Franklin [Boston, 1706], life long friend and admirer of George Washington, to whom he willed his old cane with the famous words: "My fine crabtree walking stick, with a gold head curiously wrought in the form of a cap of liberty, I give to my friend and the friend of mankind, Gen. Washington. If it were a sceptre, he has merited it and would become it."

Etiquet Editor Finds Courtesy Is Not Extinct

By Helen Bartlett.

Usually we spend our time in this column handing out advice or finding fault with the behavior of some poor unsuspecting person. Today things are going to be different.

In this day of curtailed transportation, crowded buses, street cars, and trains we have noticed a new manifestation of etiquet. It is the thoughtfulness which those who have been lucky enough to find seats in the public conveyance display when they try to make the standing customers more comfortable by holding their boxes and bundles for them.

There are almost as many people standing as sitting these days. It isn't any fun to have to stand in the first place, laden with packages or not. And it isn't easy to hang on a strap and maintain a balance while you patriotically lug home your own purchases.

The problem is worse this year than ever before. Besides fewer buses, more people employed, and dependent on public transportation, there is the added cut on delivery service and the necessity of being your own messenger.

It is a nice bit of courtesy, this interest in the fellow passenger, and one that seems to be taking hold with more and more people. During the shopping rush before Christmas there was a greater need for it than now. But it still continues and we hope it will grow. It is a good sign. Courtesy is not extinct.

Are you a wall flower? Are you too shy? To help you overcome such a handicap, Helen Bartlett, Tribune etiquette editor, has written a helpful booklet, "Charm and Self-Consciousness." It is on sale at Tribune Public Service Offices, 1 South Dearborn street, and Tribune Tower, 435 North Michigan avenue. Price, 3 cents. Postpaid, 5 cents.

Body Stores Vitamins.

The Stamp Collector

By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, but not value. The column in this page contains offers to buy and sell. Include a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

The new two cent "Nations United for Victory" postage stamp which was placed on first day sale last Thursday at Washington, D. C., was designed as an added tribute to those nations which, with the United States, are joined in a determined effort to overcome the enemies of democracy and civilization.

The central design of the new stamp is symbolic of victory, according to the detailed description as released by the postoffice department. It is arranged vertically at the left of the stamp and depicts an uplifted palm branch forming the apex of a triangular shaped procession of swords also held upright. In the upper part of the stamp at the right of the central subject is the wording "2 cents" in colorless Gothic, underneath which, arranged in three lines, is the inscription "United States Postage" in colored Gothic lettering.

In a horizontal panel with shaded background along the lower edge of the stamp is the wording "Nations United for Victory" in colorless Gothic lettering. The stamp is of the regular size, 78/100 by 87/100 of an inch in dimensions, and is printed in red ink by the rotary process and issued in sheets of 100 stamps.

The date for the first day sale was chosen by Postmaster General Frank C. Walker to coincide with the opening of "united nations week," sponsored by the motion picture industry with the support of various governmental agencies. During this week theater programs will include tributes to the peoples who are fighting against aggression and collections will be taken up at the theater for the relief of war victims.

The annual exhibition and banquet of the North Shore Philatelic society will be held at its regular meeting place, the Edgewater Beach hotel, on Jan. 29 to 31. Louis Nistler, president of the society, has appointed William H. Schulze, general chairman; Henry Lafrentz, exhibition chairman, and Edward Benson, bourse chairman.

The exhibition is open to all collectors and those interested in showing material should write Mr. Lafrentz, 5400 Winthrop avenue, for prospectus.

The special features in connection with the 1943 event include a joint meeting of the North Shore society with the Jack Knight Air Mail society; observance of the 50th anniversary of United States commemorative stamps, and a special victory section of the exhibit devoted to philatelic material pertaining to the war and including censored covers, naval, and A. P. O. covers, and similar items.

The 21st edition of Scott's United States catalog has made its appearance in a blue war jacket of similar character to the green covers provided for the two volumes of the standard catalog. The United States catalog is indispensable to the collectors of United States stamps, for it not only lists many varieties not included in the general catalog but it includes a great many groups of stamps and allied items which are listed in no other handbook.

This edition lists the war savings stamps in a prominent position and conforming to advance information has priced the stamps at face value. The "lend lease" bases have made their impression on the listing of recent issues as several varieties are indicated with A. P. O. postal markings from Antigua, Trinidad, Curaçao, etc. These special listings will increase as time goes on and collectors become aware that they have something of special interest in the covers received from the bases before the "free" postage law went into effect.

New sections have been added to the revenue group listing such stamps as those required for automobile use and for the firearms transfer. Many illustrations have been added thruout the book, as well as explanatory notes, etc. Since book publishers may be required to curtail radically 1943 productions, the United States catalog may not appear again for some time. This volume may be had from book or stamp dealers or from Scott Publications, Inc., 1 West 47th street, New York City, for $3.

The Philatelic agency which has been mentioned recently in the philatelic press as having moved to a new location in the building which has housed it for many years was established in December, 1921. During the first fiscal year of its existence, a little over six months, the sales of stamps amounted to $20,906.50, while in the year ending June 30, 1942, the sales were $525,395.05. The total sales from December, 1921, to the end of June, 1942, amount to $15,051,947.

The so-called "modern wife" often distrusts the half-knowledge gathered during her adolescence. But, instead of entering wifehood fully equipped with the intimate facts she needs, she resorts to over-strong solutions of acids for the douche which can actually burn, scar and even desensitize delicate tissue.

Today such risks are needless. Science has given womankind a safe—yet amazingly powerful liquid for the douche, Zonite. So powerful is Zonite, it kills instantly all germs and bacteria with which it comes in contact. Deodorizes—by actually destroying odors, leaving no telltale odor of its own. Prints, Harbingers of Spring, Help Brighten a Dull Wardrobe

By Rea Seeger.

Important prints, harbingers of a new season, are never more welcome than during the dull, gloomy weeks of midwinter. With winter wardrobes definitely jaded as to color and use, with spring far enough away to be just a hint and nothing else, a gay printed dress or costume works the magic desired.

Now is the time to find the most effective color combines, the most daring contrasts, and the most stunning designs. Large, bold patterns and strong colors vie with the smart blacks and whites and the effective white and navy blue ideas. Every kind of printed pattern or design imaginable will be released during the next six weeks of winter weather.

Sultry reds, yellows, and greens are worked in stunning Persian designs and used for fitted, two-piece suit dresses. Band prints of eye-catching splendor make smart day time dresses to wear as a color foil for fur or fabric winter coats. Precise, small prints are made into office and all-purpose dresses, ready for interesting color contrast with belts and accessories of still another color, while the floral prints return each season with renewed beauty and charm.

Smooth, easy to drape, printed jerseys are top favorites for the high fashion, casual, day time dresses with either tailored shirtwaist blouses attached to a simple gathered short skirt, or the short sleeved, intricately draped models with a more dress parade manner. Separate blouses of printed jersey are the newest and smartest finds of the season, ideal for immediate wear and for use later with suits and with separate skirts to make a spring and summer costume. Huge designs and bold color combines are featured in this stunning fabric.

Rayon prints are more effective and colorful than ever. Color combines, contrasts, and the blended trios of shades are particularly flattering selections for day time dresses. Designs never have been more unusual. Apparently the agile wits and brains of the textile designers, as far as tricky, new designs are concerned, function at top speed day after day. Few are repeats, and there is always something gay and amusing.

In the yardage collections the same lavish assortments of new colors and designs are likewise available, so new prints with which to revive any wilted, worn, winter wardrobe are easy for the "make your own" shoppers to locate.

Four of the newest midseason prints have been sketched. They have been selected from a large and exciting collection of new models for immediate wear, shown by a Chicago shop. For further information call Superior 0200.

According to Culbertson

[Copyright: 1943: By Ely Culbertson.]

Some hands, dealt in normal course of play, contain all the elements of the most carefully prepared "double dummy problem." Such a one is shown below. It was the most talked about deal in the recent winter national tournament conducted by the American Contract Bridge league at Syracuse, N. Y.

South dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
Match point duplicate.

The bidding at the table where South turned in a truly brilliant performance was as follows:

South	West	North	East
1 heart	1 spade	1 no trump	Pass
3 diamonds	4 clubs	4 hearts	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the club king and, on East's encouraging play of the queen, continued with a low club. Declarer ruffed, led a low trump to the ace and, on a trump return, finessed against the queen. There was nothing remarkable about this play, of course, for West's two suit bidding had virtually guaranteed extreme shortness in the red suits. But declarer's next play was evidence that he could draw the proper inferences from information he had been given by West's bidding. Declarer laid down the diamond ace and caught West's blank king.

A word as to this play: Declarer was positive that West could not have bid as high as the four level, considering his weakness in his first-bid spade suit, with fewer than 11 black cards. He had already shown one heart; therefore, he could have no more than one diamond. Naturally, declarer could not know that that diamond was the king, but he saw that, since East was marked with at least four diamonds, it would be futile to expect an ordinary finesse to bring in the entire suit without loss. Contrariwise, however, if the finesse were taken and the queen lost to the blank king in West's hand, there would be acute danger of winding up with two diamond losers.

Declarer's success with the safety play in diamonds led to a magnificent finale. Now that the entire situation was crystal clear, declarer led to the spade king, ruffed dummy's last club with the heart eight, cashed the heart king, and then laid down the ace and queen of spades.

Observe what this sequence of plays did to East! He was now reduced to the only trump outstanding, and the 10, 9, 6 of diamonds. If he ruffed declarer's spade trick he would have to return a diamond and thereby give up his "sure" trick in the suit; if he refused to ruff, declarer would cash the queen and jack of diamonds and East would have to use his high trump on what had originally been a diamond loser in the combined North-South hands.

It is lamentably rare that one sees a hand played with such imagination and flawless technique.

There are no trumps and South leads. North-South are to win five tricks against any defense.

Solution—South leads the spade. West must duck or two of North's spades will be good. South follows with a club. If West and North both pass it up, East must discard a diamond or a spade. South leads another club and West plays the ace, while East has to discard again.

If West now leads spade ace and deuce of hearts, East's discards give North and South the rest of the tricks.

If West leads the heart first, South wins East's play and leads a diamond, giving East that trick but killing West's ace of spades.

Huckleberry Finn Wall Picture

By Nancy Cabot

Huckleberry Finn is an ideal subject for a wall picture and one we all love. The hot iron transfer pattern measures 6 by 8 inches and is embroidered in cross-stitch. The two fish and a boy and girl are included with the pattern. These may be embroidered or worked in appliqué. The fish measure 4 by 4 inches and the boy and girl average about 3½ by 5.

For the hot iron transfer pattern of Huckleberry Finn and companions, No. 561, send 10 cents in stamps or coin, plus 3 cents to cover mailing cost, to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Campus Modes by a Co-ed

By Carolyn Ramey.

Just because you're a coed or a career girl doesn't mean you're exempt from household chores. Just ask us! Altho we're a strong believer in pitching in and doing one's duty, these war days, we're also still a believer in glamor, so we concocted a house frock which we think has plenty of charm altho its rôle is primarily utilitarian.

The frock has a V neckline, pointed shoulder yoke, patch pockets, and is buttoned all the way down the front, princess style. The only trimming, in addition to buttons, is readymade, easy to use rickrack braid. The apron, which matches the fabric and trimming, buttons onto the two shoulder buttons and ties in the back. Should the doorbell ring, and you want to look pretty, remove the apron, and there's your dainty house frock, spic and span.

Style No. T-8806 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, and 20 and 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, and 48 inch bust measurements. Size 36 requires, for apron, 3⅛ yards of 35 inch fabric with 2 yards of braid; for dress, 4 yards of 35 inch fabric with 5 yards of braid.

New Mattress Is Resilient Without Coils

By Edith Weigle.

The recent furniture and home furnishings shows, held here at the Merchandise Mart and American Furniture Mart, may not have offered the dealer the quantities and varieties of merchandise he's seen in years before this war, but it certainly offered him plenty of proof of the manufacturer's resourcefulness and ingenuity.

And nowhere was this more in evidence than in the field of mattresses, springs, and chair and couch construction. For it is here that the lack of metal is felt most.

One maker of innerspring mattresses and box springs known for many years for superior quality and luxurious comfort displayed a new line that is every bit as good looking as the old and just about as soft and downy. The 1943 mattresses make use of a clever construction that is like a sandwich. Top and bottom layers are of very thick, staple [top grade] cotton. The center layer, where the inner springs used to be, sewed up neatly in heavy muslin, is now filled with a section of resilient cotton, also in its own muslin sack. Sides and ends are boxed with other thick layers of cotton, just as they used to be when the mattresses contained inner springs.

And the box springs? A layer of felted upholstery is secured over 18 flexible, narrow wooden slats which are suspended from each end of the frame by double helical coils [the only metal used in the whole outfit]. These coils allow the slats to bend and give with the weight of the sleeper. This undersection is protected from dust by heavy sheeting. And all four sides of the sturdy wooden frame are padded with felted upholstery.

In its 1943 line of studio lounge-beds, this firm is using felted seat upholstery and instead of wooden slat "springs" is employing wide, interlaced canvas webbing. Wooden hinges take the place of metal ones.

An eastern manufacturer of upholstered living room furniture has so made couch and chair seats that they are ready for metal springs, which can be inserted quickly and easily, when metal is once more available in peacetime. At present they are filled with hair, down, or felt.

Another eastern company is using seat cushion springs of steam-bent birch, hickory, or ash. These arclike strips of wood have an amazing resiliency and at the same time are strong and tough. They form a sort of flexible frame skeleton which is inserted in a casing with a felt pad top and lighter weight muslin side boxing and base.

The felt top assures a firm, well filled cushion, while the muslin sides and base permit full "breathing" or flexing of the unit at all times. This cased unit is then covered with the regular filling materials and the final upholstery is applied. To all outward appearances it is no different from metal spring-filled cushions.

Fashions . . . . By Angela

The only sign of spring to my knowledge is the sight of the gay, new dresses blossoming in store windows.

Rayon silk jersey has a nice-draping quality. It is taken advantage of in this dress with the cowl neckline and the side drapery of the bodice. Notice heavy silk fringe skirt.

The two piece jumper dress is white flannel. A fringe of red or green felt outlines the pockets and the side edges. Felt flowers are appliqued on the pockets. The blouse is a separate item, but we recommend a red or green blouse to match the fringe. The dress, without the blouse, is under $7.

The third dress is just one of many navy blues trimmed with white. It is a two-piecer of rayon crêpe and could be worn as either a suit or a dress.

A black and white checked jersey dress is one that you can wear all spring and summer. It is comfortably cool even when the temperature goes soaring. The red patent leather belt provides the touch of color. Under $8.

Printed stripes of green, chartreuse and brown run horizontally on the blouse and vertically on the skirt. Number 5 is a two piece dress of rayon jersey.

Mending and Laundering.

Most garments should be mended before they are laundered to prevent fraying or tearing of the fabric; but extremely soiled or stretched garments should be carefully laundered before they are repaired.

Follow These Tips in Buying Sheets, Towels

By Claire Winslow.

This is the month to replenish your linen supplies, for there are January sales on sheets, pillowcases, towels of all types, cotton rugs and mattress pads.

Because this is a year when every woman wants to get exactly what she is paying for, and when quality and wearing ability mean more than ever before, it's well to bear in mind a few facts about linens and cottons before you make your purchases. And if you are not certain about some of the following pointers because they are not specified clearly on the item you are buying, ask the sales person, for you are entitled to know.

The following information is the result of experiments conducted by the textile research department of the American Institute of Laundering. If you follow these hints you'll avoid wasting money thru unwise buying.

Because durability is essential in sheets and pillowcases you should know something about the tensile or breaking strength of the material. Choose sheetings whose lengthwise and crosswise strengths are similar or balanced. Thread count will tell you.

Thread count is the number of threads per inch running in each direction of the fabric. For muslin the total count should not be less than 128 [that is, 66x62] per square inch. Percale has a higher thread count and is lighter than muslin.

Examine a sheet to see if it is heavily starched or has any other form of heavy sizing, for this will wash out in the first laundering and may leave a very sleazy material. To test for this rub a corner of the sheet between your hands and see if a white powder appears.

Allow for a generous tuck-in when purchasing sheets. The torn length, before hemming, shown on the label should be at least 99 and preferably 108 inches. Hems should have 10 to 12 stitches per inch, and selvages should be even and well made.

Measure your pillows before you buy pillowcases, then choose ones that are two inches wider and 10 inches longer than the pillow, thus avoiding strain on the material and also protecting the pillow from soil.

In bath towels absorbency, softness, and strength are the three important qualities to look for. When you purchase terry cloth or Turkish towels ask for those with a two-ply ground warp as this gives better resistance to ordinary lengthwise strain during use than does a single ply construction. The thicker and softer the pile, the greater the absorbency. Colored towels have been found less absorbent than white ones, according to the textile research department's report.

Hold a bath towel up against a strong light. If tiny patches of light come thru, the ground cloth is firmly woven; if patches of light show thru, the towel will probably give way quickly in use.

On the House By Louise Bargelt

We've prepared a list of steps to take in case you have some sturdy but old fashioned "mission" pieces around the house that are stained a dark brown or black, and you'd like to remove the old stain and bleach them to a modern lightness. . . . It isn't a hard thing to do if you're a person who isn't easily discouraged, and there's a simplicity and solidity to dark "mission" pieces which lend themselves well to a light and modern transformation.

Especially designed for use in war houses, there's a mirror and shelf combination, a mirror-shelf which consists of a 14 by 18 inch mirror to the bottom of which is attached, at an angle, a heat strengthened plate glass shelf. . . . Only four bolts are used in its assembly, and its cost is under 10 dollars.

If you have discovered that it won't be long before your needs will demand a new roof laid over your old roof, there's an asphalt shingle available in a variety of rich colors, and which locks firmly into place. . . . Four concealed nails fasten each shingle to the existing roof, and then interlocks to adjoining shingles. . . . In this way you have a roof prepared to resist the elements. . . . To lay an old roof over a new one is sensible, wherever it is possible, since the old roof has value as an insulation layer against cold and heat, and such a method also saves on labor.

For Quick Cough Relief, Mix This Syrup, at Home

No Cooking. No Work. Real Saving.

Here's an old home mixture your mother probably used, but, for real results, it is still one of the most effective and dependable, for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.

It's no trouble at all. Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments until dissolved. No cooking is needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and add your syrup. This makes a full pint of truly splendid cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.

And you'll say it's really amazing, for quick action. You can feel it take hold promptly. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear the air passages. Thus it eases breathing, and lets you sleep.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its prompt action on throat and bronchial membranes. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

EASY? YES! To make home-cooked vegetable noodle soup, all you do is empty the package into boiling water, add butter, simmer. What package? Our new product, called "Betty Crocker Vegetable Noodle Soup Ingredients." A work-saver!

Women in War Work

By Kate Massee

In accordance with a program announced by the war man power commission to obtain essential workers for activities which will contribute to winning the war, the Illinois Institute of Technology has announced several classes to start within the next few weeks.

A new war training course in industrial drafting, to be inaugurated tomorrow, is offered exclusively to women to prepare them for specific jobs. The course is tuition free, costs being paid by the government under the ESMWT program. The only cost to trainees is textbooks, which come to a maximum of $15. Already 281 women have trained as draftsmen.

Requirements are high school graduation, with training in mathematics and experience in industry or art school which indicates ability to draw. The average salary of drafting alumnae is $1,438 per year. Most of them are employed in making tracings or working drawings of weapons of war.

Another course, a short term program in war welfare services, will be offered to women at the institute starting Thursday, Feb. 4. An adjunct to the regular educational program of the department of home economics at the institute, it is arranged so that at the completion of any of the semesters a student is qualified to accept a position in war welfare service. Each succeeding semester will prepare the student for a more advanced job. The program, as now planned, will include three semesters. The courses may carry college credit.

The full three semester program is designed for the woman who chooses to help win the war with her knowledge of the preparation and servicing of food in industrial plants or of supervision of the welfare and food of children in war nursery schools.

The woman who has but one semester or 16 weeks to allot to training may qualify in that period as a nutrition aid. She would be capable of assisting in group feeding projects, cooking demonstrations, nutrition classes, exhibits, and surveys.

The two semester program would train women to assist in the feeding of thousands of persons vital to winning the war. Women completing it would be qualified to assist in the dietary departments of hospitals, industrial cafeterias, or other large food service units as service aids. This is not a tuition free course.

A third course is the inauguration of a war engineering program for women at the institute thru which women will invade another field that has heretofore been almost exclusively masculine. With the program's start on Monday, Feb. 8, women will be given an opportunity to train for engineering positions. The course will feature full time study 40 hours weekly; it will last three semesters and it too will be so arranged that women may go to work at the termination of any one semester. High school graduates are eligible for enrollment, which will be limited to 100 women. College credit will be given.

After one semester's study a woman should be able to do acceptable work in an engineering department or drafting office, President Henry T. Heald said. This might include tracing, detailing, and simple design. Acceptable work in elementary machine design should be accomplished by a woman finishing the second semester of training. Those who complete the third semester will be ready for employment in shop cost accounting and estimating.

Women desiring to enroll in any of the classes must apply in person at the office of war training for women on the institute's west campus, 1951 West Madison street.

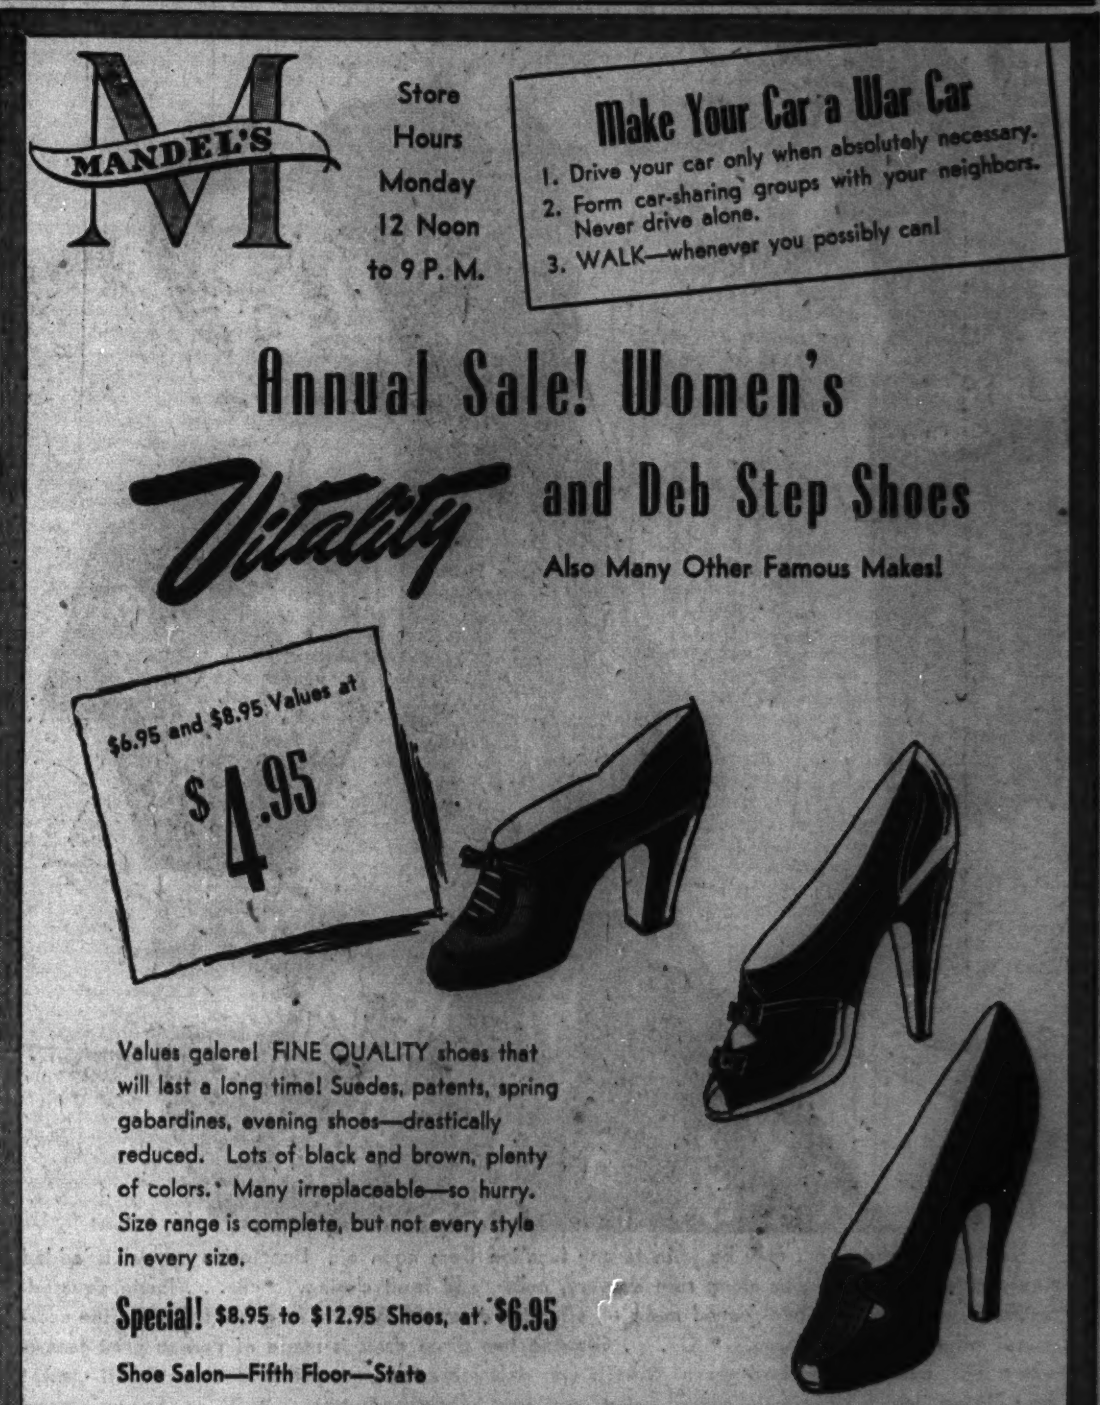
Series of War Time Marriage Lectures Resumed This Week

Continuing a series of lectures on war time marriage problems entitled, "Marriage Is What You Make It," the Association for Family Living will present Dr. Erwin Krause, Chicago psychiatrist, in a discussion of "Being a Wife Today," at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at association headquarters, 209 South State street. Speaking specifically of "duration widows," Dr. Krause states that, "Whether she merely marks time, or whether the war's end will find her a more mature, interesting person depends not so much on whether she takes a job or stays home with her baby, but on her own attitude toward herself, her absent husband, and toward the community in which she lives."


These lectures are presented in cooperation with the Association of Army and Navy Wives and designed to clarify the social, economic, and psychological implications of marriage under war conditions. The last meeting of the series, scheduled for Tuesday, Jan. 26, will be devoted to a discussion of questions from the audience by a group of consultants.
